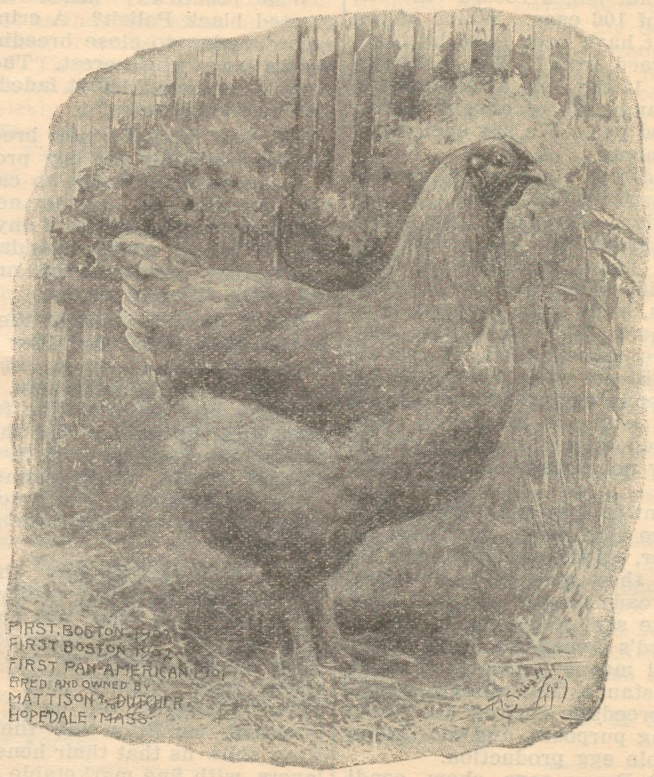
Chicken Business

By D. Lincoln Orr,
President American Poultry Assoc'n.

A few words about "Chicken business" is what you want. Well, I hardly feel equal to the task of writing anything that would be of benefit to the fancy, but will say a few words and throw out a few hints to farmers.

In the first place, the most important factor in any business is the return in dollars and cents, and the poultry business is just like the other lines of trade—to get the most return for time and money expended. Many farmers assert, that "chickens don't pay." As they are in the habit of working it, chickens do not pay, and I feel sure it is no fault of the chickens. In the first place they usually have a badly mixed up mess, inbred for years; they root everywhere; are compelled to drink anything around the barnyard; some days have a good meal, enough for two days, and the next day they get nothing. Why? Not because the farmer has not the food, nor because he is stingy, but simply because he has no time. Must get in the hay, cultivate the corn or get the ground ready for rye. His chickens are not mated for eggs, flesh or feathers.

In the fall, roupy fowls can be seen in more or less numbers. Those that pull through leave the stamp of roup on the next year's crop. Too many are usually kept for the amount of space. Houses, perhaps, get partially cleaned out once a year, and enough males are kept to fertilize the eggs from ten times the number of hens. I am not one of the poultry breeders who claim a fortune in hens, but I do claim that every farmer can get bigger returns from his poultry than from any other product on the farm, according to the capital invested.



It is not necessary to build a castle for chickens, but it is necessary that the houses should be lighted properly, be roomy and kept clean. Many a farmer has waste and does waste enough time every year to build himself a nice, snug poultry house. I will not describe a house because each location would want a trifle different house from the other. Plans can be easily gotten from the publishers of this book, I have no doubt. Do not have any draught or ventilator. Ventilators ruin more poultry than most people have any idea of. After having gotten a house sufficient in all respects for the poultry desired, the next thing is, what am I going to do? What is the aim? Dollars and cents; that is the aim of all of us. How am I going to get those dollars and cents? It is easy enough and at the same time it is very hard. There are in my opinion three main things to be worked for. Any one of three will pay. Two will pay better, but the three combined will pay best of all, and they are eggs, meat and breeding stock. It is impossible to get one breed that will excel in both eggs and meat, but the medium can be obtained, I think, and you will find it in any one of the American class. Still, if you wish to make the mainstay the egg business, why, I presume the Leghorn is the variety to choose. By all means use a fowl that is a thoroughbred through and through.

I have no doubt but every farmer must have in his acquaintance, and in his vicinity, a "chicken fancier." One who raises fowls for show and breeding purposes only, and fowls, too, that have the ability to lay well. In my opinion the fanciers produce the best layers. Go to this friend and neighbor and I am positive you can make a deal that will prove very beneficial to all concerned. He will fit you out right on the start and buy all your surplus birds that are fit for breeding, and will take eggs in season and give you more than market price. In the meantime, study up by experience. In my opinion, there is, nor can be, no rule that is hard and fast for the feeding and caring of fowls. Every one must study the business as it comes to him, and I feel sorry for the person who, in a short while, can not master the requirements of a small flock. If he does not, it is because he does not want to, or is careless and indifferent.

Now comes quite a different question: How to market the product to the best advantage. If one can not readily find customers that are consumers, get a good, lively, first-class grocer to handle your eggs, and get him to advertise your eggs as fresh, clean, and from fowls that are fed on good healthy food, and be sure they, every one of them, are strictly fresh. If you are in doubt about an egg keep it home. Once confidence is established in your eggs you can demand and get a bigger price; and the same applies to dressed fowls, and here comes in the advantage of having one breed—when dressed they all have the same appearance, and a cent or two a pound will count up quite a little in twelve months' time. Breeding stock and eggs for hatching can be sold, to a more or less degree, according to the operator's wish and ability to create the demand.

How about incubators? That is for you to decide, but were you to ask me to give some advice, I would say "get one to start with by all means, you can not get along without one." Do not get one that is too large. I would rather have two small ones than one large one. Run it according to the maker's directions and you will find it O. K. Do not use it as a toy, but as a means to make those dollars and cents you are after. Many people, in the writer's opinion, make the mistake, not in the incubator, but in the brooder. They crowd the chickens too much and do not keep it warm enough. I thoroughly believe in warmth for young chicks. Warm and dry, is my motto. Again, we usually buy one incubator and one brooder. We should have at leave two brooders for each incubator. It will cost a little more at the start, but it will pay big dividends in the long run. Incubators and brooders are no longer experiments, and no person who wishes to make money in poultry can very well get along without them.

A little time and study will place most farmers in a position to make their poultry pay, but the right start must be taken and followed up. Shiftless, hap-hazard methods will not pay in any vocation and it will not in poultry. I have visited many farms the last twenty years and have in most every case found the poultry a neglected lot. Male birds galore, all sizes, ages and colors. Hens the same way, with no special place to roost. To be sure there was a hen house, but as a rule it was so filthy and lousy, the poultry would not go in. Get out of the old rut and try it for a couple or three years. Make a business of it and I am sure you will say that poultry does pay.

The following, by Professor Gilbert of Canada, I think should convince the farmer as to why he should raise poultry:

1st. Because the farmer ought, by their means, to convert a great deal of waste of his farm into money in the shape of eggs and chickens for market.

2d. Because, with intelligent management, they ought to be all-year revenue producers, with the exception of perhaps two months during the moulting season.

3d. Because poultry will yield him a quicker return for the capital invested than any of the other departments of agriculture.

4th. Because the manure from the poultry house will make a valuable compost for use in either vegetable garden or orchard. The birds themselves, if allowed to run in plum or apple orchard, will destroy all injurious insect life.

5th. Because, while cereals and fruit can only be successfully grown in certain sections, poultry can be raised for table use or layers of eggs in all parts of the country.

6th. Because poultry-raising is an employment in which the farmer's wife and daughters can engage, and leave him free to attend to other departments.

7th. Because it will bring him the best results in the shape of new-laid eggs during the winter season, when the farmer has the most time on his hands.

8th. Because to start poultry-raising on the farm requires little or no capital. By good management poultry can be made with little cost a valuable adjunct to the farm.

"JUST THINK IT OVER."

I would like to ask the readers of the American Fancier and breeders of "Partridge Wyandottes" especially if they ever thought of another way that the Partridge Wyandottes could be bred to improve the looks of the male bird. I have thought of it for years. Far back in 1896, when I bought out the McKean stock of Golden Laced Wyandottes, Mrs. McKean sent me, with the lot, one trio of fine Partridge Wyandottes and I showed the two pullets at Scranton, Pa., that winter, 1897, and ever since that time I have thought of this change and I still believe it would add to their beauty to a large degree. My thought is this, brother fanciers: We breed the breast of our Silver and Golden Laced male birds to correspond with that of the female, and why not the same with our Partridge Wyandottes? Also Silver Penciled. Did you ever think of it along this line?

Just picture in your mind a Partridge Wyandotte male with his breast covered with those beautiful penciled feathers like the female. Wouldn't it be a sight worth looking at? Do you think we would admire the solid black breast after we looked a while at this type? And did you ever think about it, don't nature seem to work toward that end? I found it to be a natural tendency for the male breast to show feathers other than black, and these same males were valuable as pullet breeders. Then, why have we fought so long against nature? I know the standard is now made for them and you will say it's too late to change it. But just think it over; there's a long future before the breed and if in future years the American fanciers decide that changes would help to make them more pleasing to the eye and more popular, the change would come. I just throw this out at this late date, trusting that before you sit down on me too hard you will "just think it over."

THE UTILITY BREEDER.

By Michael K. Boyer.

"Utility cranks" (as we are called) are very often misjudged by poultry writers and editors, and considered a back number. We are plainly told that we are not up to date, and therefore fogyish in our ideas. The truth is, the utility breeders are making more rapid strides towards improvements than are the dyed-in-the-wool fanciers. We may not become so well known individually, nor do we get the stiff prices that the well-advertised fancier can secure, but we are accomplishing noble work, and our influence is certainly being felt.

The utility breeders have no use for mongrel fowls. They want their stock to be pure in blood. But they will not use what is known as standard-bred birds. A fowl to be standard bred must be from stock mated strictly according to markings and points as called for by the American standard of perfection. Such breeding will make exhibition stock, but it does not guarantee ideal meat carcasses nor big egg records. Why? For the simple reason that a fowl's usefulness in the practical line is never taken into consideration when the fancier mates his pens. That is entirely a different matter with them.

This we call robbing a breed of its usefulness. As I. K. Felch says: "The practical qualities are the foundation of the poultry industry. Rob a breed of utility, and breeder after breeder will desert it in disgust, until very few will be found who will keep the breed."

"Texas Farm and Ranch" says: "Standard points are what count in the show room, but if eggs are wanted, hatch from the best layers, and let standard points take care of themselves." That is the point exactly—mate and breed for egg production, but keep as closely to the standard line as possible, without sacrificing egg qualities. What the people want are eggs and meat, not "points" and "feathers."

One year, by the use of a trap nest, the writer found that he had a light Brahma hen which laid out but 13 eggs that entire season. She was a bird that would have scored high in a show room. In the same pen was a miserably marked hen, the poorest of the entire lot, that had a record in the same time of 106 eggs. Which of the two would it have been good business sense to breed from? Yet a fancier bought that 13-egg hen, after knowing its record, and only because it matched his prized pen. We say such work is poor economy.

If standard-bred means strict breeding to the written law as we find it in the Standard—for which we must not only inbreed, but also select females for pens regardless of their utility qualifications, are we growing useful birds, birds to be recommended to the farmer? Will not inbreeding weaken the constitution of the offspring? Will not each generation become weaker in egg production by this hap-hazard way of mating? Why standard-bred when it means a risk to ruin? Why not pure-bred, pure and simple?

If we want to have practical poultry we must see that every condition is provided for. If the standard calls for something that can be had without making inroads on the egg and meat problem, we say, Abide by it. But if the standard's demands cripple utility, then by all means ignore that standard. For instance, the standard weight given for breeds is entirely too heavy for breeding purposes, and too heavy for profitable egg production.

George O. Brown says show condition and business capacity with a flock are quite different things, and he is right. They cannot be one and the same.

For the past twelve years we have taken special notice that the editors of poultry papers, who have a practical knowledge of poultry culture, are the very men who encourage utility breeding. It is the same with prominent writers. Can we ever forget the encouraging words of such good poultrymen and writers—men who are practical, and men who know what they are talking about—as Drevenstedt, Felch, Brown, Holmes, Babcock, Rankin, Cushman, Wyckoff, Hallock, Pollock, Hunter, Duston and others? If utility breedings is the bugaboo that some of the would-bes would make the poultry world believe, why should such men, so high up in the fancy, defend the work that is just the opposite to standard-bred slaves?

It is the opinion of the writer that we should have less fanciers and more poultry breeds. The poultry breeders need not necessarily confine themserves exclusively to raising eggs and birds for market purposes. They can make the sale of eggs for hatching, and fowls for breeding, a specialty, or rather a side issue. That is, if they will advertise them as such.

He who can produce large egg records, or good market breeders, will very often be lacking in large scores in his flocks, but they will have a more worthy record than that which a judge can give.

The utility breeders selects his stock from his best workers, and mates accordingly.

The fancier mates according to the highest type of perfection, from an ornamental point of view, regardless of utility.

Decide for yourself—whose work is of the most worth in these times of demand for eggs and meat?

Now while we have the strongest feeling for the utility side, we do not look upon the work of the fanciers as of no good whatever. We acknowledge that the fanciers have not only given us good breeds, but have also defended the trademarks of those breeds. Without their assistance we might dwindle into mongrelism. But we know that the fancy has been guided by an entirely too radical standard, and which has crippled the usefulness of more than one breed.

Witness the departure of the white-faced black Spanish. What drove it out of the race? A craze of the fancy for a large white face, and the larger the better. Soon its record as an egg producer was lowered, and, like Mr. Felch asserted, breeder after breeder deserted it.

What practically killed the white-crested black Polish? A crippled egg record owing to close breeding to secure a large white crest. They called it an "ornament," but it faded away in its own "good looks."

Why is it that a new breed is always remarkable for egg production? It is because the make-up called for the mingling of entirely new blood, and there could be little if any inbreeding. When a cruel standard adds point after point to that new breed, we find a different record.

But it must be said of the fanciers of this generation, that they are more liberal in their views on this question than were their forefathers. Breeds are kept now more in line for usefulness, and the fancier and the poultry farmer are working more in harmony. So they should. They cannot afford to be at variance. The fancier needs the poulterer—the poulterer needs the fancier.

It is a noteworthy fact that those fanciers who have the utility cause at heart are men who are making the breeding of fowls their occupation. They cannot afford to lay all the stress upon "points and feathers." Their catalogues tell us of the good practical condition of their flocks. They show us that their hens are good layers, with fine marketable carcasses, and their male birds are strong, vigorous fellows, bred from a family of heavy egg producers.

It is the small fancier, the man who is riding a hobby, more than anything else, that can see only one object before him, and that is perfection in markings. It is that class that throw mud at the poulterers, and, for want of pure poultry knowledge, imagine that a breed should be "more ornamental than useful."—Farm-Garden and Poultry.

MAPES, THE HEN MAN.

Some Hen Queries.—Will chickens eat harmful materials if fed plenty, and no varieties of feed comunoded. In feeding meats fresh, will fat do the chickens as much good as lean, and if not, why? Is green cut bone better for laying hens than dry or granulated? How long does it take an egg the size of shot to develop to depositing size?

M. G. S.

It is my opinion that a hen given plenty to eat insufficient variety to supply the needs of her system is in no danger of eating anything that will be harmful to her unless it is mixed with other food, so as to disguise its true character. A healthy hen with an empty crop will be on the outlook for something to satisfy the cravings of hunger as soon as daylight appears. Instinct will guide her to a proper selection of food to enable her to carry on the functions of life if it comes within the range of her choice. That is she will balance her own ration. If suitable food to enable her to do this is not at hand the pangs of hunger will lead her to do the next best thing. In this case she might eat many things that would be injurious for her. A limited amount of fat meat may be eaten without injury, but any large proportion of fat meat in the food is decidedly dangerous. I have kept tallow before a flock of hens for a long time without injury, so long as they also had plenty of the grains and some skim-milk and green food. They ate but very little of the fat. At the same time they were always ready to make a rush for a scrap of fresh lean meat thrown among them. I presume the reason the lean meat is relished under such conditions is because it supplies some need of the system that is deficient in the grains. A laying hen must have a liberal allowance of albuminous matter to enable her to deposit the white of an egg in the short space of time which it occupies in passing through the oviduct (30 to 48 hours for both the white and the shell). This she can secure from the lean meat, but not to any extent from the fat. I have had but little experience in feeding green cut bone, but without doubt it is better than dry granulated bone. The granulated bone supplies little except calcareous matter, while the green bone, with its adhering particles of lean meat, contains much valuable matter besides, and is in more palatable and digestible form.

Development of the Egg.—In regard to the time necessary for an egg to develop from the ova as large as a shot, much depends on circumstances. If the hen is broody there will be no development at all, be she ever so well fed. Neither will there be during the moulting period. After the egg-producing machinery gets in motion the time can be determined by counting the number of embryo eggs in the group, ranging from a full-sized yolk down to the shot size, and multiplying by the time usually elapsing between the laying of two eggs. In most cases this will be found to be from 17 to 20 days. For this reason we must have patience with biddy, when experimenting with new feeds or combination of feeds. She cannot be expected to perform impossibilities. When we remember that the minimum time required to grow an egg is nearly three weeks, under favoring conditions, we must not expect eggs within a few days after we get conditions right for the machinery to start.

Belligerent Chicks.—On August 27 I put two hens to sit and in due time 27 chicks hatched from 28 eggs. During the warm weather of the following weeks they did splendidly, with the exception that being White Indian Games they fought terribly, the majority of them being very badly mutilated, and many of them being entirely scalped. About 10 days ago I noticed that some of them were moping around in a listless manner, and imagining they were suffering from cold took them into one of the warm greenhouses, where some of them recovered rapidly, but others died, and are continuing to die, with the result that now instead of 27 I have only 22. The chicks are perfectly clean, and as vigorous and healthy as any birds could be, with the exception noted above, and in every case which has terminated fatally the crop is apparently very much over-loaded with food, almost to bursting, more especially with whole grains of corn and wheat. My fowl-house is particularly sunny and warm, built tight and against east end of brick stable, fully open to the south, with cement floor, which is kept well covered with short straw and hay dust from hay loft, and but for the fact that they fight so unmercifully would be a good place to keep the chicks in entirely, but owing to this fact they are allowed to range outside. About three weeks ago I bought a green bone cutter and have been giving the chicks all the fresh bone they could eat at one meal three or four times a week, and it occurred to me that probably this would tend to increase their fighting propensities, but, on the other hand, I had the same trouble last spring when we were not feeding any bone or animal food at all. The only time they are allowed corn is at the last meal at night. Some one has suggested that they are being killed by an insect which they pick up from a manure heap, where they scratch, and that if we do not keep them from doing so we shall lose every one of them. This I do not believe, but would like an expression of opinion thereon. Upon examining the crop of a fine large chicken I found inside several pieces of straw about an inch long, and in the gizzard of another which died, a white worm about three inches long and the thickness of a good-sized pin. Daily feeding is as follows: Potato parings and other vegetable and meat scraps, well boiled and mixed with cow feed, consisting of equal parts bran, cornmeal and ground oats, for breakfast, and fed warm; dinner, when not foraging, whole wheat of best quality, for which I pay 90 cents per bushel, and for supper whole corn, which latter is often varied with cracked corn, which we crack ourselves in a bone mill.

The older fowls are doing finely. Do you think it right to feed them every morning, just before they get the warm feed described above, as much fresh cut green bone as they will clean up in 15 to 20 minutes, or would every other day be better? They are nearly all pullets (40) which we are desirous of getting to lay as quickly as possible. What will be the effect of giving too much bone or meat? The older fowls although of same breed, do not fight at all. J. R.

Pennsylvania.

The above letter is given in order to draw out opinions from others. For my own part I can only say, "I do not know." It must be very unusual for chicks of the same brood to fight as stated. I never knew it to happen, but I never have raised any Games. I am not much of a chicken doctor, and am not able to diagnose the case of the sick chickens from the description given. It may be a case of indigestion caused by eating too much of the worms, etc., found in the manure pile. I have known cases where earthworms fed in large doses would cause sickness and death. Then again giving a full meal of green cut bone the first meal in the morning when they are hungry may cause them to eat too much of it, particularly if it contains much fat and grease. This is only conjecture. Can any of the R. N. Y. family throw any light on this point?—O. W. Mapes in Rural New Yorker.

GAME BANTAMS AT NEW YORK.

Editor of the American Fancier:

In reply to Mr. Ricker's report of the Game Bantam awards at N. Y., he pretends to think that most of the birds that won prizes were lucky and did not deserve what they got, with the exception of Rickers & Hill's birds, who deserved all they got and more. In his report he forgets to mention about his wry tailed disqualified hen which took first, and I guess the only first he got in the open class. Ricker makes me very tired and a good many other Game Bantam breeds. I did not or do not want to criticize the judging of Game Bantams at New York, but after reading Mr. Ricker's report it made me very hot and I take this means of replying to our friend, Mr. Ricker, through your valuable paper, for I think his remarks very unjust, and had I been as lucky as he by getting the first prize on a disqualified bird, I think I would have gone away back and sat down and said as little as possible, not criticize the judge's awards of the remaining winners in the Game Bantam alley, although he did disappear after the judging and did not materialize again until his report in the American Fancier.

INDIAN GAME.

I read with interest W. S. Templeton's contribution on Indian Games, and as regards color of the various sections I heartily indorse his views. I believe he is right in the main as regards other points, too, except that in carriage of tail only low tails be permitted. In the first place, I believe in keeping the Cornish Indian (and, of course, the other colors should be the same as regards general type) as nearly oriental in its characteristics as possible, or at least as near as our climate will allow. I don't believe in drifting away from the original English type, which, in the first birds sent to this country, shows distinct oriental attributes unlike those of the show game or any other fowl. It was because of the wonderful gloss of plumage, solidity of flesh, and erect, elegant carriage that this fowl was pronounced of great beauty and valuable as a table fowl. High tails, loose, lustreless plumage and a general "dunghill" shape and carriage will lose this breed its popularity, and I am decidedly in favor of following the lines originally laid out by nature for this noble fowl. Very erect carriage, low tail, immense breadth, heavy-boned, wide set shanks, solidity of flesh in all meat sections and close, narrow, lustrous feathers, are I believe, the chief points to breed for. Large size is to be commended, but not, in my belief, at the expense of quality. I would also be in favor of punishing long, lean "exhibition game" head and reddish eyes. Strong head, heavy, rather short beak, small, low, pea comb, pearl, gray, "daw" or "gander" eyes (which should give plenty of limit) and rough, pebbly face are true oriental characteristics. The smooth skinned (face), long headed, long legged, high tailed specimens that sometimes pass muster at the show are not worthy of the name "Cornish Indian Game."

As regard shoulders, I think "high" shoulders, or rather "sharp" shoulders, should be avoided. This style of shoulder is "oriental" enough, but belongs to the "Jap" and Malay class. The shoulders can be broad and prominent without being high up on the neck. The Indian Game should not be constructed on angular plans, but should be gracefully rounded and at the same time show both elegance and great muscular development. Mr. Templeton has the proper conception of what the breed should be and, I understand, breeds some extra fine specimens in both the Cornish and White varieties.

CHARCOAL.

Fresh charcoal is readily eaten by all kinds of fowls and is excellent for them in the winter when they are closely confined. It serves as a corrective, especially when they have been fed on the same kind of food. It also promotes digestion. Charcoal is a good grit, as no matter how fine it may be it is sharp and cutting, and assists in reducing the food to a fine condition. It is largely used in the brooder houses for little chicks, as they relish it highly.

SATURDAY, MARCH 5, 1904.

NOTICE.

Circumstances having arisen to prevent the transfer of The American Fancier to J. W. Alvis and The American Fancier Co., The American Fancier has therefore again been taken up by J. H. Drevenstedt and will be published as heretofore at Johnstown,N.Y.

THE AMERICAN FANCIER FOR 1904

The American Fancier will be published from its old home, Johnstown, New York, beginning with this issue. The American Fancier also resumes its old dress of black and white, and the same old title head that has stood the test of time and expressed the policy of this paper.

The subscription price is restored to one dollar a year. We do this in justice to both subscribers and advertisers, as there should be a bond of sympathy between them. This is not a sample copy or trade organ. It was built on journalistic lines and we propose to follow in that direction. Thousands of our subscribers are willing to pay one dollar a year for a weekly poultry paper. This means less than two cents a week. To cut this price demands increased advertising rates, which again works contrary to the just laws that govern a well conducted paper. We believe advertising rates and space should be governed by the amount of goods an advertiser has to sell. To charge an exorbitant rate is to defeat the purpose intended. Advertisers cannot play a losing game. They quit, and the annual exodus of mushroom advertisers to the great beyond is well known.

The classified departments of advertising represents hundreds of the smaller breeders and fanciers, many of whom have produced some of the choicest specimens at our shows. They breed but few, but what they have to sell is worthy of their reputation. They advertise according to the amount they have to sell; to overstep the line means financial loss.

The editorial columns will be conducted on the same independent basis as heretofore, with "Davy" Crockett's motto: "Be sure you are right—then go ahead," no matter where the chips may fall or strike.

The show reports will be as complete as possible, and will give the rising poultryman or the unknown, who has the birds that catch the eye of the judge, and fanciers an opportunity to read the comments on his birds and the awards, whether he is an advertiser or not. To be plain, The American Fancier proposes to be a breeding pen for fanciers. We do not believe in the crystallization of the business in the hands of the few. On the contrary, the more good breeders and fanciers we have the better.

We might say more, but the Eagle will do a little screaming every week. and from what the great bird has seen and heard in the past two months, there will be something doing in the fancy in the coming months.. The only apology we have to make is the delay in getting out this issue, due to the fact that the transfer of the paper back to the publication office from Indianapolis to Johnstown was consummated after Monday, February 29. But subscribers and advertisers can rest assured that they will get the paper promptly every week after this. Fellow fanciers, send your views and whatever news you have promptly and we'll do the rest.

FROM THE EDITOR'S PERCH.

We regret that many of our subscribers have failed to receive their papers during the last month. It would be impossible to duplicate all these copies, but if those who have not already written us about it, will do so, we will be ready to extend their time of subscription.

The article that appears on our title page was written by Mr. D. Lincoln Orr for the new catalogue of the Cornell Incubator Company, and is of such practical value and full of common sense that we deem it worthy of the place allotted to it in this issue.

The catalogue mentioned above is a new departure, and Mr. E. G. Wyckoff is entitled to the credit for getting up such a handsome and readable book. There are numerous articles by well-known poultrymen and judges, all of which are written in the spirit that inspired the originator of the idea. The entire absence of any advertising dodges in their articles is refreshing and a healthy innovation. It is the beginning of a new era in catalogue making. Our readers should avail themselves of the opportunity to secure this handsome book. Address Cornell Incubator Company, Ithaca, New York.

The illustration on our title page is a faithful picture of a Buff Wyandotte hen that we have had the pleasure of judging on several occasions, and we are of the opinion that her equal has not been seen since. Fine in type, this bird had besides a plumage which is beautiful golden buff color, evenly balanced in each and every section, has never been approached by any buff bird. Not only the color, but the rich sheen or lustre was present.

McGuire & Lyke of this city report a great boom in incubators, brooders and supplies for the chicken yard. They carry a great line of nearly all the leading goods and for the benefit of local poultrymen—and their number is very large—we will state that orders will be filled by the above firm without delay and with same attention to details as afforded by the firms they represent.

T. E. Orr, secretary of the American Poultry Association, will lecture on poultry at the Farmers' Institute, Mayfield, N. Y., March 9. As Mayfield is but a few miles from Johnstown and this entire section is enveloped in the garb of ermine, Prof. Orr will have a fine chance to dwell on conditions and not theories that govern poultry culture in the Adirondacks in wintertime. He will, however, meet quite a number of chicken men that are real fanciers and who can deliver the goods.

The editor of Farm-Poultry, in the March 1 issue of that excellent paper, makes the following comment:

"Editor Drevenstedt rises to remark that everybody was at Rochester, 'including Mr. Graft.' Some thought there were several of the Graft family present."

We accept the correction. On close inspection of the voting on one or two occasions it appears that about twenty-three members of the Graft family were present.

Editor Jonathan Haverhill Robinson is also handing out a few left-handed compliments to T. E. Orr, secretary of the American Poultry Association. We must admit that Brother Jonathan is right in several of his criticisms, especially on the Buckeye Red matter. Those pea-combed, crimson-hued feathered bipeds evidently had a strong following when the bell rang, but the latter on second thought dwindled down to a few. The Rhode Island Red men were too strong for the combination organized to defeat the admission of Single Comb Rhode Island Reds to the new Standard. This is probably a part of the unwritten history of that "making history" remark of Secretary Orr, which Bro. Jonathan so fondly dwells upon in Farm-Poultry.

There are three score cards used in this country, viz.: The American Poultry Association, the Decimal, and the Fletcher. The latter is the most thorough and complete of the three, but too slow in its application. The Decimal is a speedy proposition, being based on the decimal system, i. e., allotting each of the ten sections ten points. The American Poultry Association card is the recognized and official instrument at exhibitions held under A. P. A. rules.

The assertion made in Farm-Poultry that comparison judging advocates wanted the Decimal card recognized in order to place all score cards in a ridiculous light is entirely without foundation. The writer of these notes introduced the resolution to recognize the card in good faith, and Mr. I. K. Felch, the father of the Decimal card, is well aware of that. The reason some members present declined to vote in favor of it was: They were told that comparison advocates had no business to vote on score card questions.

We will say right here that twelve shows in New England were judged by the Decimal system, and why the American Poultry Association should fail to recognize the fact that its membership is made up of all kinds of people of all kinds of opinions is not clear. We believe in the open door and a liberal policy in all such matters. The written description of each standard variety of fowls is the guide for the judge, no matter what system he uses. The official card of the A. P. A. must be used where shows are held under its rules, but where exhibitions are simply run on independent lines, with only the Standard description as a guide, what matters it which system is applied?

It is all very pretty to hear the speeches and read the articles of judges swearing eternal allegiance to the A. P. A. card, etc. Grand stand plays are usually attractive to those who look at such matters in a superficial manner. There is a deeper and broader view to take, one that metes out full justice and extends fair play toward all engaged in exhibiting and judging poultry.

Another matter that seems to have afflicted some with a virulent form of disease, known as A. P. A. judgiasticus, is: That all judges must be members of the American Poultry Association in order to judge at poultry exhibitions. This is about the most un-American piece of business ever sprung on an intelligent public.

The Pittsburg show last week was a rousing success. We fully expected to print a full report, with awards, in this issue, but owing to blockades on railroads, the official marked catalogue did not reach us as we go to press. Next week both report and awards will appear.

We cannot control the wording of advertisements sent in by our patrons, neither are we responsible for what they claim. But American Fancier advertisers do not claim to have won what they did not for this reason: The American Fancier publishes the official awards at all shows and its readers are posted. That is why advertisers get results for the buyer can select with safety from the numerous "ads" in our columns and purchase of those that suit their tastes and meet the requirements as far as their stock is concerned, by having the same in competitions at shows with prominent exhibitors. This again works to the benefit of the poultry business in eliminating the misleading statements of advertisers as represented in their ads in other journals and but rarely in the American Fancier.

An example of this kind of advertising has recently been prominent. A certain breeder advertises that he captured all the honors at the great A. P. A. show held at Indianapolis in 1903, and consequently his birds are "the champions of the world."

A reader wants to know how to cure an egg eating hen. Place her in a coop or room by herself and feed her nothing but rotten eggs for a few days. This is an old but effective remedy.

Many improvements are promised in the poultry department of the New York State Fair this season and from present indications it will be the model poultry exhibition of the season.

The publisher of the Poultry News, New Brunswick, N. J., has purchased the "Wichita Poultry World," of Wichita, Kansas, and consolidated it with the News.

There appears on our first page this week a new title head. It is the old one cleaned up and refined. The old one was designed by the writer on the Fourth of July, 1893, in New York city; the new one was ordered by the same person March 1, 1904. It marks the beginning of a new volume, No. 22, and, we hope, a new era in weekly poultry journalism of the United States of America.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.

February 17 to 20.

The third annual exhibition of the Electric City Poultry and Pet Stock Association, held at Schenectady, N. Y., February 17 to 20, was the most successful, financially and artistically, in the history of this excellent club.

The new armory building with its twenty thousand square feet of floor space gave ample room for the coops, besides leaving wide aisles for the exhibitors and visitors to view the birds.

The Empire Cooping Company did the caging and feeding, to the satisfaction of all. All fowls were shown singly except breeding pens, and the classification was perfect. Single tiers also prevailed, except in the Bantam and Pigeon aisles, where double tiers were used to good advantage. Another excellent feature was the labeling of each variety with nicely printed cards, indicating the breed exhibited. This was a great convenience to visitors. In addition to this a complete catalog of the entries was on sale promptly after the judges had finished their awards.

We have no hesitation in saying: Schenectady wound up the Empire State show season by giving the neatest, best arranged and managed exhibition of the season. The officers, being gentlemen and fanciers, treated exhibitors and visitors as such.

The judging was done by W. J. Stanton, F. B. Zimmer and J. H. Drevenstedt, and was practically completed the first day of the show. The number of entries numbered 920, with a total of over twelve hundred specimens on exhibition.

The American classes were well filled as far as Barred, White and Buff Rocks, White Wyandottes and Rhode Island Reds were concerned.

Barred Rocks numbered over one hundred, with many well known winners in the money, as will be seen by the awards. Mr. Jacquins had a fine pen on exhibition that came too late to be entered for competition. The cock and one hen in the pen were purchased by Dr. A. H. Phelps at a long price and sent to Mr. S. Walker, Anderson, England. These two birds are fine type of the breed, being excellent in size and even in color and barring. First pen of fowls and first hen and winning pullets were high class birds.

White Rocks full of quality, winners being up to size, shape, with clean white plumage and good head points.

Buff Rocks very strong in quality, notably the first and second cockerels, two beautiful birds in color and shape, the winning pullets being also of superior excellence. First pen a very strong one in color of male and females.

White Wyandottes strong in numbers and in quality. First cock a grand bird in size and shape, excellent plumage and very good head points. Second shown in fine condition, but fails in breast and toes to first. First hen a beauty in shape, nice plumage and head; the rest full of quality, but many were past show state. Cockerels a really strong class, first being shown in superb condition, plumage white, fine head points, good style, a trifle shortness of back being his only fault; second not in the best of feather, but a magnificent bird, one that will make a grand cock bird when filled out. He has all the lines of the true Wyandotte, with white plumage, yellow legs and beak and good head points. Pullets, like hens, were mostly past the best age to show, although the first, second and third showed up well in shape, considering the lateness of the season. Pens not as strong as the single classes, first excepted.

Buff Wyandottes, small classes but winners of the blue strictly first class.

Partridge Wyandottes failed in numbers, but the quality was very good.

Silver Wyandottes, except few pullets and cock, not up to high water mark.

Golden Wyandottes and Silver Penciled, small classes but good in quality, especially the penciled.

There was a large display of Rhode Island Reds and the quality of the winners was considerably above the average.

Leghorns, fine classes, the Whites being unusually strong in numbers and full of quality, most of the winners being well known, with a number of new comers that made competition exceedingly warm. Rose Comb Whites fine in quality. The same can be said of the S. C. and R.C. Browns and Buffs.

Minorcas first class in S. C. Blacks and Rose Combs, while the Whites were decidedly superior to many other exhibits seen this season.

Asiatic classes brought out a grand lot of Light Brahmas, with Woodcrest Farm and G. S. Moore fighting for the honors. It was a rare treat to see so many good Light Brahmas. Partridge Cochins made another grand showing, but Buffs while good in quality failed in numbers. The same applies to Langshans, White and Black Cochins.

Dark Brahmas, excellent in quality but not heavy in numbers.

Hamburgs, Dorkings and Houdans, small but good classes.

Orpingtons made a nice showing in all classes.

Bantams filled many coops, the largest variety of same yet seen at a winter show. Dr. A. H. Phelps had many new and rare varieties in the Ornamental division on exhibition that attracted much attention. Game Bantams while not as strong in numbers as expected, contributed a number of high-class specimens. Sebrights and Cochin Bantams, all first class specimens.

A pair of Lakenvelders, exhibited by Dr. Phelps, caused much favorable comment.

The awards below tell the rest of the story:

SINGLE COMB BUFF LEGHORNS.

A few lines about this most popular variety of fowls that have made steady advance in popularity since their introduction into this country in 1890 will no doubt be of interest to some one.

Having as they do, the greatest of all, the elements of beauty and utility. What will you find more beautiful than a pen of these golden beauties? To see them on a green lawn is a sight that is very pleasing to the eye, their rich, golden buff blending so nicely with the green grass.

They are a fine table fowls, yellow skin, and meat that is tender and sweet; are rapid growers, and if kept free from lice and given good range will make broilers and fryers at an early age. At maturity males will weigh six to seven pounds each, and females four to five pounds each.

As layers they cannot be beaten; have heard them called the best layers on earth, which expression I think does not go very far wrong.

Pullets will begin to lay when five months old; at the age of six months they begin in earnest and keep at it, even during the moult—I have had hens lay a few eggs during the entire moult.

The Buff Leghorns are great foragers, which accounts for their being such a healthy breed. On account of activity they seldom get over fat. If the grain is kept in litter where they will have to dig for it they will work all day long, and a working hen is bound to be healthy and lay eggs. In disposition they are wild and restless, but this can be overcome by gentle handling and kind treatment.

During my seven years' experience I have had very few that offered to sit. I gave three a trial this spring and they proved a success by hatching ten chicks each, and taking care of their chicks like an old mother.

To sum up, we have in the Buff Leghorns four excellent qualities: beauty, table use, laying qualities, and great foragers, making them the ideal bird for the farmer and fancier.

Prospective buyers will do well to give them a trial before buying any other variety. There never has been such a demand for stock and eggs as there has been the past season, and I think the future outlook for the Buff Leghorn is getting brighter every day.

FRED E. OLSON.

OLEAN, N. Y.

The first show at Olean, N. Y., under the auspices of the Olean Poultry association, proved to be a success far beyond the expectations of the management. It was gotten up in a hurry, and with time somewhat limited an entry of something like four hundred birds was secured. Secretary Fobes handled his department in a business-like way and was ably assisted by President Collins and other officers of the association. Spratts cooped and fed the show and sustained their well-known reputation in this direction by satisfying all concerned.

Arrangements for the second annual show are under way and with a large hall and plenty of time to prepare for it, Olean will hold one of the largest ever held in the famous oil county.

The quality of the birds was excellent in most classes, the White Wyandottes leading in numbers, with a large number of high scoring birds among the winners.

Buff Wyandottes, smaller classes but fine in quality, notably winning pullets and cockerels. The few Partridge Wyandottes shown were very high class birds, fit to show anywhere. Barred and White Plymouth Rocks high class as far as the winners were concerned. Buff Rocks not up to the others in quality, excepting a few winners.

White Leghorns numerous and very good in quality, notably first cock, cockerel and the winning hens and pullets. Brown Leghorns, good classes.

The few Light Brahmas and Buff Cochins made up in quality what they lacked in quantity.

Black Minorcas made a good showing, several of the winners being good enough to be shown at the biggest of shows.

There was a big lot of Rhode Island Reds, both Single and Rose Comb, and the quality of some of the winning females was superior to most we have handled. They were red, not buff, in color.

Buff Leghorns had but few representatives, but they were exceedingly fine ones.

The display of Bantams was quite large, but in most classes the birds were over weight and quite a number entered under names not heard of elsewhere.

The attendance was very gratifying to the management, about one thousand paid admissions being counted. A fine showing—a fine showing for a small city like Olean.

BETTER TURKEYS..

Begin Now to Seek New Blood.

Never before in the history of this country has there been such a scarcity of turkeys for Thanksgiving and Christmas as has been the case this season. Never before has such an effort been put forth to secure a full supply, nor was there ever known before to be such a failure in raising them. By far the greatest danger we confront in growing turkeys is the weakness that comes from too much inbreeding. People throughout the country have neglected introducing new blood into their flocks. This must be speedily done in all the flocks, or the turkey breeding as an industry will be ruined. It is useless to hope to obtain new blood of a proper quality in one's own neighborhood. Send off at least a thousand miles to get what you need. The people of Rhode Island have become thoroughly aroused about this, and whole carloads of live turkeys have been brought into the state from the far West, and the best selected and sold to the turkey growers, to breed with their own turkeys for market purposes.

In this way new, vigorous blood for the upbuilding of their stock is being more generally distributed throughout Rhode Island than anywhere else. If this same interest would be shown by every turkey grower in the East, West, Northwest and South, equal improvement would be made in raising young turkeys. Let every one send miles and miles away across the country if he wishes to secure new and vigorous blood. Many of the diseases that come to turkeys, young and old, such as blackhead, leg weakness and delicate constitutions, may all be blamed to careless inbreeding. There never has been any reasonble excuse for this, and with the present opportunities for enlightenment and information it has become more than inexcusable.

The practice of selecting and selling to market the largest and quickest maturing young turkeys is the second evil in turkey growing that needs correction. Two-year-old hens, or rather hens in their second laying season, are by far the best for producing poults. Never keep the small or under-sized turkey hens. Nor is it best to depend too much on very large over-sized ones if you have them. The strong, vigorous, medium-sized hens in their second season of laying are the best that one can possibly have for laying the eggs from which to produce the young turkeys.

One-year-old toms of good size, heavy bones and vigorous constitutions are the best to select. Do not be induced to believe that your neighbor can give you any relief through an interchange of toms, unless by chance he has lately introduced into his flock a cross of a wild turkey tom, as many have done. There were at Madison Square Garden last winter a dozen or more young toms that had come from a direct cross of a wild turkey tom with Bronze turkey hens. These young toms were stamped with the vigor and strength of the wild ancestor, and we know of some who purchased them that have been quite successful with turkeys during the past season.

Do not imagine that white turkeys are less vigorous or harder to raise to maturity than others. It is possible to have just as much strength, vigor and constitution in the white turkeys as in any other breed or variety. More attention should be given to growing the black turkey, as well as to the Narragansett turkey. We have seen some flocks of buff turkeys, or rather of a cinnamon or reddish brown, that were almost as large as the bronze or Narragansett. These are said by Rhode Islanders to be a very sturdy, vigorous turkey for market purposes. We en-

A Hatching
.. Wonder ..

The new "CYCLE" Hatcher. The perfected result of the latest discoveries in artificial incubation. A wonder of the 20th century. An entirely original and novel method of hatching and brooding chicks. It requires only the self-supplied moisture of the egg itself. No egg tray doors to open. Regulation automatic and scientifically exact. Holds from 50 to 10,000 and can be set when started with 50 or more eggs per day until its capacity is complete, making unnecessary to fill entire machine at starting. Eggs cooled without removal from machine. Will hatch hens, ducks, geese, or turkey eggs equally well and at the same time. Made entirely of metal and asbestos; fire-proof and will not warp, swell, shrink or crack.

A hen never hatches better or stronger chickens than when setting on the ground, in which event the underside of the eggs are cooler than the upper surface, and the "Cycle Hatcher" is the only machine built following closely the natural laws of incubation covering this very essential point, as well as many others.

When the fresh air enters the machine near the center tube it carries with it the moisture it naturally contains. On becoming heated it rapidly expands as it is carried along the heated surface, and because the upper metal of the egg chamber is still warmer than the incoming air, the moisture is carried along until it reaches a cooler surface, where it condenses, leaving the dry air to rise again to be forced out in waves by the rapidly expanding air above.

It would be impossible to get the same results from a wooden machine or one made from any other absorbing material. In the Cycle the only thing that can absorb moisture is the asbestos felt directly under the eggs, where it should be, which never becomes absolutely dry during the process of incubation.

50 egg size only $5.00. Full particulars promptly furnished on application.

courage greater attention being paid to the Narragansett, the black, the buff and the white, because we should like to have all the different breeds tried in as many localities as possible throughout the country where turkeys are grown; so that the merit of each in each section may be thoroughly tested. No doubt some turkeys will do better in some localities than others will.

The black turkey is said to be the best suited to a climate like Texas. The Narragansett has been most successfully grown in the bleak climate of New England. The Bronze turkey seems to thrive better in some localities than others. All this should be taken up and studied by the turkey growers throughout the United States and Canada. Above all things, do not neglect to hunt up and find new, strong, healthy and vigorous blood to renew your flocks. In the future never breed close, and always select the best females for your own breeding stock, and sell the rest to market.—Country Gentlemen.

TO MINORCA CLUB MEMBERS, GREETING:

The year of 1903 was the most successful year in our club's experience, in substantial gain of members, unity of purpose and influence with the poultry fraternity at large. We closed the year with the largest and best Minorca exhibit ever seen in America, seventy-nine single birds and ten pens, all single comb Black Minorcas, and taking out all the winners there was class of fine quality left. Beside the S. C. B. Minorcas, there was a large exhibit of S. C. Whites and Rose Comb Blacks. The Minorca exhibit was the talk of the show, lacking only five birds of equaling the Plymouth Rock class, which was the largest.

The annual meeting was held at the Chicago show according to notice and all officers were re-elected with the one exception of Mr. Davis, Sec'y-Treasurer, and it was the desire of the meeting to re-elect him also. But he having requested to be released from the duties of his office on account of being recently elected to the superintendency of the schools of four townships in his own state, Chas. G. Pape was elected to succeed him. But on returning home, Mr. Pape found his own business in such condition that he could not spare time from it for any club work and he wrote me to resign his office immediately. In this emergency I prevailed upon Mr. Davis to continue to hold the office another year. He consented to do so and to edit the catalogue immediately on the one condition that club members respond promptly with advertisements, articles and cuts for the catalogue, that he may thus be able to have it ready for distribution at an early date. He says if members respond immediately he can have the catalogue out on March 20th. Now let us hold up his hands and help ourselves at the same time by sending ads with cash to pay for them, articles and cuts as he requests.

We are fortunate in having Mr. Davis remain at the helm, because the present year, with the catalogue out on time, is the club's great opportunity. The club is financially out of debt, with all expenses paid to date and a small sum in the treasury in contrast with one year ago, when on entering the duties of his office, Mr. Davis found debts to pay amounting to nearly $50. Minorcas are coming to the front faster than ever before.

GEO. H. NORTHUP,
President American Black Minorca Club.

ETERNAL VIGILANCE.

Entirely too many do not consider how necessary it is to give continual vigilance to poultry culture if they wish to be successful, says California Cultivator. This is the cost that must be put into the business or failure is sure to follow your endeavor to raise poultry without it.

CHICKS VS. ADULTS.

Age a Vexed Question—A Proof in Unshed First Feathers.

It is a vexed question this of the age of birds and would continue so if it remained to be determined by artificial means. Mr. W. B. Tegetmeier thinks the plumage in the first year gives unmistakable proof to all who have once had attention called to it. He says:

"The test on which I rely is the moulting of the flight feathers of the wings. Every sportsman knows that in autumn a young partridge is always to be recognized by the outer flight feathers being narrow and finely pointed. They are, so to speak, 'chicken feathers,' which have not yet been entirely supplanted by the adult feathers that will, in the natural course of events, succeed them and serve the bird until the next autumnal moult. The flight feathers in birds are of three kinds. Those nearest the body, attached to the first bone of the wing (humerus), are usually the smallest, and are termed the tertiaries; those between the first and second joints are termed 'the secondaries,' and those beyond the second joint, that grow from the part of the limb furthest from the body, are termed 'the primaries.' These primary feathers are not seen when the wing is close, being hidden under the secondaries.

"The gradual renewal of the wing feathers—the moulting—is one of the most remarkable processes in the economy of nature. It is obvious that if all the feathers changed at once, the bird would be incapable of flight for some considerable time. Such an inconvenience is avoided by the wing feathers, like those of the body, being shed and renewed gradually and in a fixed and definite order.

"The primary feathers are ten in number in the fowl and all allied birds. The one which is always shed first in moulting is that nearest the body, and, as they are numbered from the one furthest from the body, this is called the tenth. The shedding of the tenth is followed by the shedding of the ninth, that by the fall of the eighth,and so on in succession, the last to fall being the first primary or outside feather of the wing. Thus the young partridges, when killed in October, have still one or two chicken feathers or primaries to throw.

"Now, the point that concerns us at present is the age at which chickens throw the first primary feather, and assume an adult plumage in the wing. An example will be better than any assertion of mine. At the St. Neots show of the Huntingdonshire Agricultural society, held on Tuesday, July 20, I gave the first prize for Dorking chicks to a very fine cockerel belonging to Mr.Butler Smith. The bird had just shed the second primary, and had still one more (the first) to throw. Finely developed it was, there could be no doubt in my mind that the bird was a chicken of the present year. Opportunely for my inquiries, Mr. Butler Smith visited the show, and I took the opportunity of asking him if he could inform me the exact age of the bird in question,whereupon he told me that the first chickens he had this year were hatched on January 13, and that this cockerel was one of the brood. Here, then, we have a very definite case. A bird hatched and reared under every possible advantage, and fed so as to make an early show bird, takes the extra prize for the best Dorking in the yar, and has still its first primary to throw when it is one week over six months old.

"At the show held at Bristol June 2, there were classes for chicks of various breeds. As judge, I unhesitatingly passed over every bird that had got into complete adult plumage. Some of the grossest cases I disqualified as autumn-hatched birds, whose moult had been arrested by the cold weather of the previous winter, and resumed in the spring not where it left off, but de nova,so that the birds had in each wing flight primary feathers of three different moults—namely, chicken featners as well as adult feathers of last year, which latter had been partially replaced by adult feathers of the present season. Other birds in full mature plumage I also passed as being over age. This proceeding led me into a correspondence with one well-known exhibitor, who showed a pair of very fine Malay chicks that had assumed the most complete adult plumage when, according to the conditions of the show, they should not have been more than twenty-two weeks old. Such a development of plumage I hold to be impossible; and I shall continue to hold such opinion until it is disproved by irrefragable evidence.

"I have made the moulting of gallinaceous birds the subject of very careful observation, with a view to elucidate some vexed ornithological questions, and I am free to confess that I do not believe any fowl or pheasant ever assumed its complete adult plumage in five months."

TABASCO SAUCE.

Poor old S. C. Comparison is gone. His will has been probated and I am left to settle up his accounts.

He never survived the shock of the Rochester meeting.

Speaking of the Rochester meeting, well, well, well! Oh my, oh me, on my! Wasn't it lovely? Wasn't it grand? Sublime to the limit, and Robinhood sat around like a sick kitten to a hot brick.

Would not let go for a second.

Gee, but what a fire they had in Rochester after we left; still we were not so warm.

Tom Orr got there after all. Tom is a pretty good fellow, but needs a shaking up a bit on some points.

Bean Eater Robinhood says this is the same "Orr" who did not vote for "Unkle Ikes" whats yer call it card on sentiment and then worked the sentiment racket for some of those dung hill fowls called R. I. Reds.

Curtis was there and his tongue wagged and wagged from beginning to end. I often wonder if Curtis could not stop long enough so his friends could see how he looked like with his mouth shut.

That committee of 5, hem! Well?

Tom Orr is going to start a Sunday school. It's gol darn queer a show cannot run to suit its officers without being preached to by a goody goody outsider.

A good name for the A. P. A. would be "Jumping Jacks."

And dear Essex was on deck. It would make one sick to hear him shoot off his trap. Always had a front seat and he let out more hot air than would run the R. P. J. for six months.

The queen of the party was Bates. What a lovely, solemn face he had on his shoulders as chairman, and did you notice how he had his mustache curled? Wasn't he just too sweet for anything?

Link Orr got there too. Pays to hustle for votes if you want anything.

Drev. sneaked the revision meetings, so I hear.

"What "grafters" that committee is. Something awful the way it was run.

The Illustrate Standard. Better called the Standard for Ills. Mark my word, there will be more than one pain before we are through.

If there are any two men in the business who needs a balance wheel those two men are Big Hewes and Little Curtis.

I can not understand why men will make such asses of themselves. Notice the "Interior Chickendom" for Feb.

S. C. Comparison just before he died wanted to know if Chas. McClave presided and when the answer came in the negative he faintly whispered "I'm a prophet."

EACH ISSUE WORTH ONE DOLLAR

That's what the giant judge and editor, tor, Theodore Hewes, Says.

Editor Drevenstedt, of the American Fancier, has his announcement for the coming year in the December 6th issue of that wideawake weekly. In this announcement Mr. Drevenstedt says all there is to say, and says it in about forty words. It is worth a dollar to read this little notice and compare it with some others, and there is just about fifty-two times each year that Drevenstedt says something on his editorial page worth a year's subscription. Here is the only poultry journal in America that publishes in full the show reports that are sent in. It is a great weekly poultry paper. The subscription price is only $1.00 per year, and we guarantee it worth the price. By special arrangement we can furnish you the two papers, the American Fancier and the Inland Poultry Journal, for $1.00 a year. Send orders direct to this office.—Theodore Hewes in the January Inland Poultry Journal.

THE BALTIMORE FIRE.

The following graphic description of the terrible Baltimore fire was contained in a letter written by Mr. G. O. Brown, a veteran breeder and judge of poultry and one of the editors of the great newspaper, the Baltimore Sun:

"Saved from the fire" myself but lost all my poultry and agricultural books. Sunday, 7th, was a day such as I never before experienced, nor do I ever again care to see another half as serious. To see a towering flame an hundred feet above the tallest buildings on both sides of the street, and meeting together across the street, slowly but surely coming toward The Sun, eating the big buildings up like paper boxes, and fanned by a powerful gale which carried burning embers for squares ahead of the flame, is something that no words can describe. Before 2 o'clock I realized no human power could stop the awful fire's progress, but hoped dynamite or something else might happen to stop it. Consequently we "hoped" too long to save much. When I left with a few things I put in an old peach basket over which I tied a letter box file wrapped in brown paper, I ran diagonally across Balk street one square, and my package caught fire four times. The business heart of the city was simply destroyed, but about every business man is already established in some temporary quarters and a new Baltimore will soon replace the acres of ruins. I didn't get last week's American Fancier, which I generally get every Monday morning. As I am sure there was something about the A. P. A. meeting in it, I don't want to miss it. Will you please see that I get a copy?

Yours truly,

G. O. BROWN.

FOOD VALUE OF EGGS.

Like milk, an egg is complete food, says Farm and Fireside. If fed on eggs alone, young animals are furnished with all the necessary elements for the growing of bone, muscle and all that goes to make a perfect animal of its kind. A hen can possible lay 200 eggs in a year, but ought certainly produce 120. Eight eggs will weigh a pound.

EGG-EATING DOG.

One of the best cures for an egg-eating dog, says an exchange, is placing the nest egg in a solution of caustic soda and water. When a dog takes one of these eggs in his mouth the moisture of his mouth will dissolve the caustic and he will drop it as he would a live coal. He will soon go shy of eggs.

"THAT LITTLE OLD BLUE HIN."

Written for the American Fancier by an alleged poet.

Och! She is a daisy,
Every day in the bin
She'll lay an egg so aisy,
That little old blue hin.

Shure Moike, she's a Loo-loo
And thought it no sin,
To lay on Sundays too,
That little old blue hin

She laid so much and quick,
She was but bones and shkin.
It made her awful sick,
That little old blue hin.

We gave her crame and milk,
Whisky, beer and gin.
She looked as foine as silk,
That little old blue hin.

She growed so fat and shlake
And niver laid an egg agin.
But we shall always kape

MODEL Cyphers

The Model Incubator

The above is the only Trade Mark that legally embodies the name "Cyphers." I am the sole owner of this Trade Mark. Incubators and Brooders bearing it are manufactured under my personal supervision, are my latest design and are the result of ripe experience in the construction and manufacture of this class of goods. It stands for the best there is in artificial incubation.

The Model Incubator

(not the Cyphers by name) contains all my latest improvements, and is warranted to outhatch my older invention, which machine still bears my name and is manufactured by another house. Do not get the two machines confused. The Model Colony Brooder is an entirely new invention. It has many points of superiority over other brooders. It is double walled, has diffusive ventilation under the hover, is light and cheerful, and can be used as a colony house after the brooding season is over. It was received with more than usual interest at the New York Show, where it excited most favorable comment. The Double Indoor Brooder is designed to replace the Sectional. It is lower in price, has two compartments in each end—a hover and a warm nursery—is light and cheerful, is easily cleaned, and one lamp heats it. If you are interested in an indoor brooder look this one over. My catalogue is free. A simple request brings it. Do not forget the street address.

to breed the BUFF WYANDOTTE winners if one has the right kind of stock, SUITABLY MATED. It's one thing to secure individuality, but to reproduce or BREED ON, it's absolutely necessary that a specimen's ancestry for A TERM OF YEARS be of the very best of it's time. COLDEST WINTER ON RECORD.

The winter of 1903-04 has been the coldest on record, with a mean temperature of 26 degrees. December's mean temperature was 30 degrees, 4 degrees below normal; January's 24 degrees, 6 degrees below normal, and February's 25 degrees, also 6 degrees below normal. The next coldest winter was 1874-75; mean temperature, 27 degrees. This year, reckoning the daily deficiency, we are creditors of the weather for 490 degrees of accumulated past-due heat. The snowfall was 28½ inches, or about half as much as fell in 1892-93 and 1893-94. It was the coldest December for 23 years, the coldest January on record excepting January, 1893, and the coldest February in 19 years. These statistics are from the Weather Bureau.

GET RID OF UNPROFITABLE FOWLS.

Are there any "dead birds" in your flock? asks Mirror and Farm. It does not pay to compel four or five good hens to support the others of the unprofitable fowls. It is not advisable to keep a rooster for every 10 hens, but keep only one and confine him, with the proper number of hens, in a plat, so as to use eggs only from that flock, and do not feed any males not necessary to be kept. All the fat hens that eat their share and do not lay are "dead heads" and should not be supported. The practical poultryman will keep nothing that does not pay for its own support. It is better to have six good laying hens than to keep 25 that give only a fourth the number of eggs that the entire lot should lay.

10,000 Plants for 16c

PICKING DUCKS AND GEESE.

In scalding ducks and geese the water must be of the same temperature as for chickens but they must remain langer in the water, as their feathers are shaped to turn even hot water, says Rural Home. Some people prefer not to leave them in the water so long, and after removing them wrap them up in a blanket to steam. But this is a little risky when picking for shipment, as not all persons who help in the picking process know just exactly how long to let them steam, and often when taken from the blankets the flesh is cooked. After picking off all down and feathers hold them about 12 seconds in scalding water to plump them.

Lakenvelders.

By Percy W. Thornley.

Some two years ago there was a small stir in the poultry world about the introduction of the new breed, Lakenvelders. Firstly, as to what it should be called in England, and, secondly, as to where it originated. With regard to the name, a lot of correspondence took place in some of the poultry papers, the result of which was that it was decided that the name by which it was known on the Continent would be the best for it to go by in this country, although whether it should be spelt with an "f" or a "v" opinions still differ, but the club have decided to call them Lakenvelders. From what one can learn, it is anything but a new breed on the Continent, having been known in Westphalia over half a century ago.

The worst of any new variety introduced from abroad is often the indiscriminate way it is bred there, so we do not know if we are buying what one may call sports or birds that have been carefully line bred. A breed may be kept pure for generations, but unless some definite points are kept well to the front, and others well in the background, a hopeless muddle is generally the result. Thus it is in England we start with a few really good specimens and a great many bad ones. In the winter of 1901 and 1902, when the boom started, the ridiculous way some people sent money over to Holland, only to receive in return birds not worth as many shillings as they had cost pounds, has done a great deal towards making this charming variety unpopular. Consequently, some started with birds that had even won several prizes abroad, where the competition is not so keen, but, unfortunately, were not good enough to start a strain with in this country. Now that we have some dozen or more breeders all aiming at producing birds to a given standard no doubt we shall soon see a marked improvement of the breed. Through the kind energy of Colonel Sandbach in collecting subscriptions, a challenge cup is now offered for the best Lakenvelder cockerel or pullet of the year.

The point that first attracted my attention to the breed was the coloring of the cocks, which is totally different from any other kind of poultry. I allude to the black neck hackle and white body. In all other breeds the neck hackle is either as light or lighter than the body color, with the exception of the light Brahma, but in this variety the order is reversed, and the contrast is very striking. Even people who know nothing about poultry are at once struck by their uncommon appearance. One very good feature is that it is a good forager, and with anyone that can give them an unlimited run they are little or no trouble to keep. Many of my own birds roost out in the trees all the year round. Some people complain of them as being small. Well, they are not large, that is true, but to compensate for that they are small-boned and small eaters, and really it is surprising the great amount of meat there is on the breast of a good Lakenvelder. They are fairly good layers, and those that do want to sit make very good mothers. One gentleman described them as good sitters, but from my own experience I should not call them a sitting variety. I only wish they would all sit, for then they would be ideal birds for hatching Pheasants.

MR. P. W. THORNLEY'S LAKENVELDER COCKEREL.

First Dairy, Etc.

Taking our standard as a guide, I will roughly describe what a good Lakenvelder should be like:—Firstly, the cock should be active and sprightly in carriage, with a full tail, carried at an angle of 45 degrees. The comb, which is single, should not be too large, and the ear-lobes white and almost almond-shaped. The neck hackle a solid shiny black, and as much of it as possible free from any grey or bronze feathers. Many birds are very grey on the top of the head and about the lobes, which takes off a great deal from their appearance. The breast, body, and wing white, but black edgings to the flight feathers does not disqualify. The saddle hackle shiny black, free from striping, also the tail. In the hens the comb should be upright and small, the neck hackle as dense as possible, and the tail spread out and solid black. The rest of the plumage pure white. The legs blue-slate, and the eyes bright chestnut in both sexes. The most difficult points to attain now are the solid black hackles, especially the saddle in the cocks, and a true black tail to the hens.

With regard to mating for breeding, believe it is quite possible to breed both good cockerels and good pullets from the same pen to start with. Say, for example, a pen containing a cock and six hens. Put with him three hens as clear in body color as you can possibly get them, with good black tails and dark neck hackles. From these latter you will breed the best pullets. Of course, in mating another year care will have to be taken.

The bird illustrated has won first Dairy, first Scottish National, and first Wrexham under different judges in each case.

PITTSBURGH, PA.

February 22-27.

The seventh annual show of the Pittsburg Fanciers Club, held February 22 to 27, was the greatest and most successful ever held, both from the number of entries and the quality of the fowls, the American classes bringing out the largest entries. 57 cockerels in the barred rock class being the largest and best display that Judge W. C. Pierce has been at work on the past season. Wyandottes coming second, while G. H. Burgott looked after the Leghorns, they being the largest classes ever before served at Pittsburg. James H. Childs, Pittsburg, was the largest exhibitor, showing 96 birds in the Buff Rock, White Wyandotte, White Leghorn and Black Minorca classes. Every bird penned singly and carried off his share of the prizes and cups. The Ivory Soap specials, $10.00 cash on cockerels and pullets, went to Springer Bros., Bridgeton, N. J., on White Rock cockerel, and to James H. Childs on White Wyandotte pullet. There were seventeen silver cups as special prizes given by the Pittsburg Fanciers' Club, and were won as follows:

Best display Plymouth Rocks, G. H. Hilderbrand, Jr., Pittsburg.

Best display Wyandottes, T. L. Pillow, Allegheny, Pa.

Best display Buff Cochin Bantams, Marie Hilldorfer, Allegheny, Pa.

Best display Leghorns, Albert Yoder, Munhall.

Best display Orpingtons, Jno. C. Glenn, Pittsburg, Pa.

Best display Black Minorcas, James H. Childs, Pittsburg, Pa.

Best winnings on Golden and Silver Penciled Hamburgs, Livingston & Staley, Pittsburg, Pa.

White Wyandotte Club cup, Jno. A. Jackson, McKeesport, Pa.

Buff Leghorn Club club cup, E. Wardel, Venetia, Pa.

Ancona Club cup, A. C. Kelgour, Swissvale, Pa.

Best Magpie, cup, Wm. Ehinger, Philadelphia, Pa.

Best Turbit, cup, A. L. Henderleiter, Pittsburg, Pa.

Best Tippler, cup, Harry Grier Skiles, Pittsburg, Pa.

Best display Long Faces Clean Leg Tumbler, cup, Helen Sutch, Pittsburg, Pa.

Best White African Owl, 1902 bred, J. M. Skiles, Pittsburg, Pa.

BURGOTT WRITES UP LEGHORNS AND MINORCAS.

S. C. Brown Leghorns—Good, large class, somewhat weak in males, but made up in females. The 1st and 2d hens and pullets the proper sort, with good blood lines behind them.

R. Comb Browns.—Small class, one or two good birds.

S. C. White Leghorns.—An all round good class. 1st cock a typical nice bird, not in good condition. 1st cockerel a gem and in good condition; balance of males good.

S. C. White Leghorns—Females, 1st and 2d hens and pullets were good birds, not in the best of condition, but were easy winners.

R. C. White Leghorns—No a large class, but some very good birds.

S. C. Black Minorcas—Cock 1st and 2d fine, large, typical birds. Cockerels, we can say the same of. The 1st and 2d females each in hens and pullets, the type shows a line breeding.

SMOKED FEATHERS.

Secretary Sutch had everything in readiness and his corps of backers, Major Selden, Alderman Hilldorfer and that hustler, Jimmy Skiles, with coat off, was working; and that conservative gentleman, President Moore, was ever watchful for the welfare of the show.

Crackerjack birds in nearly every class.

Eugene Sites had a fine string of birds and won several blues in each class. His Barred Rocks were exceptionally strong.

That old veteran German baron, Julius Frank, had his share of honors in Buff Rocks and Hamburgs.

Major Hill of Ohio was in appearance, and cleaned them up on turkeys and waterfowl.

The press was well represented. American Fancier, Commercial Poultry, Senator DePuy with the Advocate, big Theo. Hewes, with the Inland Poultry, and Happy Hooligan, the Pierce Fanciers' Gazette. Theo. nobly attended to the Gazette while Happy wrestled with that gigantic American class and he had his hands filled.

Big Theodore worked hard and did his paper credit.

They say Burgott handled the Mediterranean class well, and a warm one it was; all round birds fit to grace any show room.

Another large exhibitor was Mr. Childs of Allegheny City, who showed a grand string of birds and evidently represented several thousand dollars' worth. He won grandly in every class entered.

The attendance was a crowd from start to finish, every one interested and many birds brought long prices. The Pittsburgh Fanciers' Club is to be congratulated upon the magnificent cups which were displayed in one of the prominent jewelry stores, I think about 25 in number.

"Ed." Seldon felt somewhat put out in his way that Burgott should have disqualified one of his Black Minorcas, but he says that's the way the officers always fare.

"Charley" at the "Grand" fared likewise and worked the short change racket on the Minorca judge to get even, you know. I want to say that show has a management not to be excelled, and it's a show town, too.

Yes, David Nichols was there, and he did himself proud. He judged everything they asked him to from a pin head to a balloon, and retired each evening at 9 p. m. How's that? We understand David has several dollars invested in U. S. Steel and got some good pointers in the Smoky City on the subject.

Winners of highest honors at Cleveland, Elmira and Great Rochester shows. Catalogue for stamp. A. G. Barlow, Box A, Barkers, N. Y. Mention Fancier.

The above advertisement appears in the March 5 issue of the new paper, "Poultry Life of America," published at Indianapolis. It is strange that Mr. Barlow should request its readers to mention Fancier, and he means The American Fancier all right because he has been doing it for the last 57 issues of that paper, but it is excusable, as he was surrounded by columns and columns of his old associates. Thus are lightning changes made possible!!

SOLD ALL HE HAD.

Editor American Fancier:

The small advertisement I have taken in the American Fancier since the first of the year has brought me good results. Have sold 43 dollars' worth of Bantams. Could have sold many more if I had them to sell. Have lots of inquiries.

FROM THE EDITOR'S PERCH.

Beginning with this issue, George E. Howell of New York city becomes associate editor of The American Fancier, and also takes charge of the New York office of the latter, where he will be glad to see all friends of the paper and endeavor to make their visits pleasant and profitable. Mr. Howell in 1893 and 1894 was bookkeeper in The American Fancier office, and his conscientious work has always been a pleasant memory to the writer. Mr. Howell is a practical poultry raiser. Twenty years ago in old Orange county, New York, before either of us became editorially connected with poultry papers, we farmed it, Howell at Howell's Station, and the writer at Washingtonville. Both of us bred Silver Wyandottes, and that must have been the first tie that brought us together. Selling eggs and poultry to the New York markets was a trade both pursued. To-day Mr. Howell is established in the egg and poultry business in the metropolis of America. What he writes will be based on facts and years of experience. Being educated in The American Fancier school, he will hit straight out from the shoulder and make his department a safe and reliable guide for poultry raisers. Suffice it to say that he will be a poultry, not a desk editor.

The illustration, as well as the article, appearing on our title page this week, we reproduce from the Feathered World, England. The illustration, while an excellent one in detail, hardly conveys the correct type of a Lakenvelder male as we have seen the latter in this country. The birds we have examined are not as heavy in body nor as large in size, as the picture Mr. Simpson has drawn.

We have had so many complaints from subscribers who failed to receive The American Fancier regularly during the month of February, and in some instances did not receive any at all, that we, in response to a number of requests, republish the Rochester show report and awards complete, in order to keep the files of our subscribers as near complete as possible on such matters.

We also regret that the Auburn, (N. Y.) show report was not published. Having just received the copy containing same, and the awards, back from the Indianapolis office, we will take pleasure in printing same in our next issue.

The judges at the Minneapolis show, 1905, will be T. E. Orr, Beaver, Pa., Sharp Butterfield, Windsor, Ontario, Theo. Hewes, Indianapolis, Ind., and Geo. D. Holden, Owatonna, Minn. Surely a strong combination.—Poultry Herald.

Sure.

Floods causing delays in the mails, freights and express, cussedness and several other unmentionable things have conspired to put us behind several days the past two weeks in getting out The American Fancier.

An old friend and well-known fancier, sends us the following letter, written by his grandson, a chip of the old block, age eleven: Dear Grandfather: A lady up the street from us wants to know the best you can do for four settings of eggs. The White Wyandotte chickens seem to be the craze here. People are wild after them. I think if I was your agent I could take a good many orders for sellings. The lady that wants to buy settings from you wanted to buy my Teddy, but I told her he was not for sale. I went after the cigar stems and sand. I put the sand on the nests yesterday and I sprinkled them yesterday noon with sand. Write at once and tell me about the settings. If you have eggs to sell, send a few of your winning cards. Your loving grandson,

There is an American fancier. The letter was written in a clear, bold hand and not an error in spelling. It is safe to say that young man will be heard from in the future. He starts right.

The writer of these notes extends an invitation to all young American fanciers to contribute letters giving their experience and opinions. The impressions of the child mind are very apt to be original and unbiassed. They are certainly very welcome and refreshing to the older fanciers. Now, boys, start a column going.

Grant M. Curtis says, "birds of feather flock together." Of course, it's an old saw, but good at all times. In the poultry business the grafters graft together, the dead beats beat together, the liars lie together, the fakirs fake together, and the honest fellows shiver together, especially this season, with zero temperatures and coal at six dollars a ton.

What age can a hen attain? The following clipping from the New York Journal may shed a few rays of light on the subject involved in the question:

Middletown, N. Y., March 8.—This entire community mourns the death of Eliza, a most respected hen. She was probably the oldest hen on record, being nearly seventeen years of age. She was hatched May 2, 1887 and had all her life been the special pet of Mr. and Mrs. James H. Harding. She was kept at first for her egg-producing qualities, but was later kept for the purpose of finding out how long a hen would live. She will receive a proper burial.

Homer Davenport's exhibits at the sportsman's show, held the past two weeks at the Madison Square Garden, proved to be features, notably his collection of Pheasants. The Morning Telegraph had a lovely cartoon of "the only cartoonist" one day. It was a case of getting even. But the great, good-natured Davenport can stand the gaff always, and is and will be a power not only in political life of America, but in the poultry fancy as well.

Mrs. George E. Munroe, Dryden, New York, addressed the farmers on poultry culture at the New York State Institute held in this city March 11. Mrs. Munroe is doing excellent work in this direction throughout the Empire state.

The writer of these notes desires to convey to the editors of the Feather and the Poultry Advocate his sincere appreciation of the kind words they published regarding The American Fancier and its editor. The courtesy and sincerity contained in these notices make a man feel that good, old-fashioned journalism is not a thing of the past.

The Lancaster County Poultry and Pigeon Association will hold their next annual show at Rudy's Hall, Lititz, Pa., December 27 to 31. F. G. Bean will place the ribbons.

William Cook & Son are publishing the American edition of the Orpington Poultry Journal at Scotch Plains, New Jersey.

Mr. H. E. Lovell, Benevola, Md., has added Buff Cochins to his yards and will make a specialty of the two famous Buffs, viz.: the Buff Rocks and Buff Cochins. We are glad that the latter are again becoming popular and getting in good hands.

W. R. Curtiss, Ransomville, N. Y., famous for their White Wyandottes and Pekin ducks, green cut clover and clover meal, have become agents for Puritan Chick Food and Hall's Mammoth incubator. The latter is attracting considerable attention and is a novelty in artificial hatching that promises to be a practical success.

A mistake appeared in Mr. B. L. Osborne's advertisement. It should read $3.00 per 50, instead of $3.00 per 100.

A FEW FACTS.

Finding the advertising columns of the first issue, March 5, 1904, of Poultry Life of America, published at Indianapolis, filled with a large proportion of display and classified advertisements belonging to The American Fancier of Johnstown, N. Y., we sent out a few letters of inquiry and received the following replies as we go to press:

New York, March 9, 1904.
American Fancier,
Johnstown, N. Y.

Gentlemen:—In reply to your letter of March 7, we beg to state we did not authorize the "American Fancier Co. of Indianapolis" to publish our ad. in the "Poultry Life of America." In regard to the electrotypes for the two advertisements which we have been running for years in the "American Fancier," we sent you two to take the place of the two that cannot be found in Indianapolis, as per your request on postal card. We also sent you a new copy for our adv., also an additional 1-inch S. C. adv. to be run until forbidden. Wishing you success with your paper again, we remain,

Yours respectfully,
EXCELSIOR WIRE & POULTRY SUPPLY CO.

New York, March 9, 1904.

We have not authorized any one to insert our advertisements in "Poultry Life of America." We sincerely trust that the satisfactory business relations existing under the original contract may not be interfered with by any change in policy or management.

J. H. BOSCHEN, & BRO.

Blauvelt, N. Y., Mch. 9, 1904.

My Dear Sir:—We did not authorize anybody to have our advertisement in the Indianapolis paper.

KLEE BROS.

Meriden, Conn., Mch. 9, 1904.

Dear Sir:—I sent the latter part of February to the American Fancier Co. advertising matter to be in the classified columns in American Fancier only. Also sent to them other adv. and sub., all to be in the American Fancier only and no other paper.

HENRY F. LIETZ.

Lawton's Station, N. Y.

The advertisement in Poultry Life of America was not authorized by me by any kind of an agreement, verbal or written. GEO. H. BURGOTT.

Lockport, N. Y., March 9, 1904.
The American Fancier,
Johnstown, N. Y.

I did not authorize Poultry Life of America to publish my advertisement in their paper. I gave mine to G. W. Webb to be published in the American Fancier, and nothing more. So if you will see that it appears in the future, it will please me very much. It is the best poultry paper for me. A. M. BRUNDAGE.

Glens Falls, Mch. 8, N. Y.

Friend Drevenstedt:—

When I sent my ad. to the American Fancier with check for same, I intended it for the "AMERICAN FANCIER," edited by one J. H. Drevenstedt.

DR. PHELPS.

West Lynn, Mass., Mch. 9, 1904.

Gentlemen:—I authorized no ad. in Poultry Life of America. In 1902, Spring, I sold $73 worth on a $4.50 ad. I am a small breeder, but what I have got are good ones. The American Fancier I think is the best advertising medium in the market. Josiah Fitz, 4th.

GIBLETS WINS THE CUP

From the Razoo Poultry Journal.

Among our prominent advertisers no man is better known that Mr. Hacklefeather Giblets. We are pleased to record his winnings at the show held by the Eelskin Poultry Club at Jerkwater Junction, Oklahoma, viz: First on Rose Comb White Dominiques, Silver Penciled Langshans and Buff Toulouse Geese, giving him the cup for the largest and best display in the show.

AMERICAN FANCIERS SPEAK.

JUDGE NICHOLS' PLEA.

Editor American Fancier:

Your notice at hand stating that the Fancier is back again to its old home, which I am glad to hear.

Johnstown, New York, is the only place for a fanciers' show, the only place for the home of the American Fancier, and the only editor of that newsy paper is John H. Drevenstedt of Johnstown, New York.

Most respectfully yours,
DAVID A. NICHOLS.

THE VOICE OF A FAMOUS HAMBURG FANCIER.

Editor American Fancier:

I am pleased that we are to have an old "Fancier" again visiting us weekly. It really seemed like we had lost a friend when the paper "went west."

DR. J. S. WOLFE.

BRIEF AND TO THE POINT.

By Wire to American Fancier.
Lawtons, N. Y., March 2, 1904.
Congratulations.
GEORGE H. BURGOTT.

GLAD.

By Wire to American Fancier.
Pittsburgh, Pa., March 2, 1904.
Glad to hear you have paper back.
HON. J. P. HILLDORFER.

HEARTILY GLAD.

Editor American Fancier:

I am heartily glad to see the American Fancier back at the old stand, as I believe it will do a great deal more good in old York State than out west.

GEORGE BACHMAN.
Tannersville, N. Y., Mar. 7, 1904.

VERY GLAD.

Editor American Fancier:

I am very glad to congratulate the American Fancier on its return to Johnstown.

N. V. WITBECK.
Ballston Lake, N. Y., Mar. 7.

SPARKS.

Editor American Fancier:

It pleases me to this extent: The new Fancier, while attractive and all that, did not seem to be it. We had become, after the several years we have been familiar with the American Fancier, very much attached to it as it was.

A. L. SPARKS.
Swainton, New Jersey, March 6, 1904.

FEELS VERY GLAD.

Editor American Fancier:

The notice arrived that the American Fancier has again been taken by you and must say that I feel very glad, as the east ought to have a paper strictly up to date. I have heard at least 6 or 8 people say that the "Fancier" is not what it had been. I was thinking all the week why it was that the East could not afford to keep up an up-to-date poultry paper. I will write in the interest of the Lancaster County Poultry and Pigeon Association to thank Mr. J. H. Drevenstedt that he has again taken hold of the valuable American Fancier.

D. G. WITMYER.
Lititz, Pa., March 2, 1904.

FACTS, NOT PAP.

Editor American Fancier:

I am delighted to hear the news. Inside facts straight from the shoulder always interest the old hands and attract the beginner, even he is beyond being fed on pap.

E. J. RICKER.
Scranton, Pa., March 2, 1904.

MORE THAN GLAD.

Editor American Fancier:

I am more than glad that the American Fancier has come back to you, especially after working the number of years that you have to build up an unique poultry paper.

C. W. DURLING,
Manager Onalake Poultry Farm.
South Plainfield, New Jersey, Mar. 7, 1904.

CHUCK FULL OF GLAD.

Friend Drevenstedt:

I am just chuck full of glad to think the American Fancier is going back to Johnstown.

The Market Poulterer

By Geo. E. Howell.

Mr. Howell, associate editor of The American Fancier, will furnish weekly reports on the egg and poultry market, and answer all questions submitted to him relating to commercial and practical poultry keeping. When replies are requested to be sent by letter, stamps must be enclosed and letters addressed to George E. Howell, 70 Christopher St., New York City.

With the difficulties accruing from the extreme scarcity of eggs fast disappearing under the influence of increased shipments from all parts of the country, prices have fallen accordingly. Yesterday's (March 8th) prices were 21c per dozen for Southern and Western Fancy and nearby selected stock going at 22 to 25c. a dozen, undergrades down to 16½ cents as to quality.

Considering the season of the year there is much encouragement in the prices for the product.

From a consumer's standpoint it has been trying and troublesome times to supply the family larder without breaking the bank.

There is a rift in every cloud, and as I told in a former article, when the case became most acute, an invasion of German eggs began, to the shame of the American hen. Immediately the manipulators dropped the price on all grades.

When the second consignment of German and Austrian eggs arrived,, although the market had made a second advance, the quality was so poor, the jobbers had many of them turned back on their hands, which shows it will not do to bank on a foreign invasion of the egg market.

To assume, as some do, that eggs have been retailing at as high as eight cents each, is mere rot; four cents would be nearer the average.

The egg producing belt of this country generally rotates from one section of the country to the other; that is, when the Michigan and York state hen is in dry dock, the hens of Oklahoma and Texas, along with Missouri, are working overtime. Mentioning Oklahoma is no jest, as both that and Indian Territory are now furnishing us with some of our finest chickens and Turkeys, and oceans of eggs, due wholly and entirely to the diffusion of pure bred fowls among the flocks.

But to resume,following the West and Southwest the South takes up the burden, causing a steady stream of eggs to flow into the cities, but unfortunately, this year, cold waves followed each other simultaneonsly over all sections, and completely paralyzed the machinery of the whole egg producing country.

Now fortunately the South and Southwest especially are doing grandly and the result is lower prices.

Now that the Wyandotte family ,the White especially, has taken so prominent a place on many of the large utility ranches, the article on their origin, by John P. Ray of Hemlock Lake, N. Y., the original Wyandotte man, published in the N. Y. Tribune Farmer, becomes doubly instructive and interesting, he says in part: The eighteenth annual report of the Bureau of Animal Industry for 1901 contains a bulletin on American breeds of fowls, written by T. F. McGrew. In the chapter devoted to the Wyandotte breed, the author has fallen into gross errors that are misleading to poultry men and the public in general.

The person who seeks to write history has a right to expect that the public will ask for names of persons operating, places and dates at which they did their work. If Mr. McGrew knows that the Wyandotte is such a conglomerate mixture of uncongenial blood lines, he knows who did the mixing, where and when it was done and through what source or channel it comes to us to-day. Until he does this, he can rate me as a doubting Thomas, and I will give some of the reasons for the lack of faith that is in me.

First—No such crosses as named were made by breeders in this section who had these birds coming from my flock; and a sufficient number of fowls and eggs were shipped North, South, East and West to give the breed wide dispersal, while others at an early date, like the Rev. Forsythe, George F. Hull, Barnard Brothers and the late L.Whittaker, North Adams, Mich., were not idle. The last named gentleman was a very successful breeder, and established a strain of great value that was widely known as the Whittaker strain, and some breeders claim to have the strain to-day, while not a few have given him credit for originating the breed. The following letters, the originals of which lie in my desk, will not only tell where and when he got

Still further, if a dark Brahma or Hamburg cross had been taken in the early 70's, we should have got some vulture hooks on the one hand and some blue legs on the other. Yet, who ever saw either in the silver laced Wyandotte or its ancestor? I never did. Then again, with such a mixture of blood as named by Mr. McGrew,, would White Wyandottes have cropped out as sports? We had them about 1875. If so, then the time is ripe to gather grapes from thorns and figs from thistles. To make the dark Brahma theory look all the more ridiculous, when the cross was taken a few years since, we got the new family of Wyandottes known as Pencilled Wyandottes.

I will now give the origin of the Silver Wyandotte breed. In the spring of 1870 we obtained a setting of eggs from the late Edward Bronson, of East Bloomfield, N. Y., later of Abilene, Kan. His fowls were the first cross between the Silver Sebrights and the black and yellow Chittagong. The following fall we purchased Mr. Bronson's best pair our selection of his breeding birds. This blood we bred together for two years. Our next move was to select a pair, our choice from the flock of pure Silver Sebrights owned by my friend of many years, the late H. M. Doubleday, who at that time lived near Dexter, N. Y. Mr. Doubleday is entitled to the credit of bringing the Silver Sebrights to Western New York. With this new cross injected into my blood line, the birds carried three-fourths of the Silver Sebright blood and one-fourth of the Chittagong, and I do not know of any other blood being crossed with the breed down to date. We will let Mr. Doubleday tell us about the Silver Sebrights.

Padelfords, N. Y., Sept. 23, 1897.

Mr. John P. Ray, Hemlock, N. Y.

Dear Sir: Answering your inquiries, will say that I removed from Sandy Hill, N. Y., to Farmington in the year 1866. I brought a trio of Silver Sebrights with me. These, I believe,were the original and only ones brought to Western New York. These birds I purchased of a man by the name of Van Schork, who got his stock in the town of Easton, N. Y. This breed of fowls I believe to have been a foreign or imported bird. They were similar in characteristics to the Silver Wyandottes of to-day, except in color. They were chocolate colored, where the Wyandotte is black. They were chiefly rose combed, though occasionally a single comb appeared. Some were slightly feathered on the leg; the cocks had the wing bars of the Wyandottes of to-day, of which you know better than any other man that they constituted three-quarters of the original blood of which the Wyandotte was made. I have no knowledge of their having dark Brahma or Hamburg cross, and do not believe that they had such crosses, as I never saw a blue leg or vulture hock among them, which must have appeared had they possessed these bloods.

I recall selling you a pair of chicks (your selection) in the fall of 1872. I was well acquainted with the Chittagongs, which were essentially the Golden Wyandottes of to-day, and which constituted the cross of which you made the Wyandotte. Hoping that some day the public will accredit you with the honor which is due you of originating the Wyandotte breed, I am, sincerely, H. M. DOUBLEDAY.

As Mr. Doubleday says in his letter, the Chittagongs were essentially the Golden Wyandottes of to-day. These birds were owned in considerable numbers during the 60's in the towns of Victor, East Bloomfield and Canandaigua, Ontario County, N. Y., by Peter H. McMillan, John M. Norton, Chilotte Collins, a Mr. Cooley and Mr. Brace, now of Victor, the world famed single combed Brown Leghorn breeder. My first birds were silver laced and gold laced, clean legged and feather legged and single combed and rose combed. I selected for breeding stock the silver laced, rose combed ones, and for some little time those with feathers on the leg; these, as a rule, were the best birds as to shape and color. Later we bred for clean legs altogether. What higher compliment can be paid to a breed than to have all its sports and cross bred birds that have refined into a type take the name of the original breed with color as a prefix? We now have the silver and golden, white and black, pencilled and partridge buff Wyandottes, with the Dominique Wyandotte yet to bob up.

Fred Crangle, do you know I would dearly love to see you? Why are you so shy? "Eaten up by dogs, eh!" Nice dodge you put up. Now then, Freddy, you must show yourself soon.

In Noah's time they drove the animals two by two, the elephant and the kangaroo; but they did not have a "Hewes and Curtis."

Did you hear anyone make a motion to donate Tom $200 this year?

If Curtis had more sense and less "gall," what a great fellow he would be; but a small potato can not be a big one, that's sure.

He was at Rochester, but I did not see him. Heard about his Peerless vote, but the Gale, or something else, must have blown the votes onward.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

January 29-February 4.

The annual show of the Flower City Poultry and Pigeon Association, held at Fitzhugh Hall, Rochester, N. Y., was the best and largest in the history of the association. The quality of the birds was exceedingly fine in nearly all classes, many noted winners at other shows competing.

The hall was not large enough to hold the entries, either in single or double tiers, which necessitated doubling up birds in coops, an always unsatisfactory arrangement. Neither were some of the coops the best to show birds off to advantage. But the management did well under all these discouraging circumstances, the officers being very hard and earnest workers. Secretary Drechsler certainly did yeoman service in handling all the details of his office, besides assisting others on the floor.

Birds were all judged and a marked catalogue of the show ready by Monday afternoon, the first day the show was open to the public.

The judges were: Theodore Hewes, F. B. Zimmer, H. J. Qilhot, M. F. Delano, J. H. Drevenstedt, W. J. Stanton and Charles E. Lang. Mr. Ross C. Hallock, the special White Wyandotte judge, was unable to reach Rochester in time to judge, owing to an accident. The banner class was the White Wyandottes, 229 birds being therein, including a number of noted New York winners. Cock class very strong, first New York, although not in best condition, again winning the blue. He is a beautiful type of bird. Second and third both in fine shape, and real stars. Hens a beautiful lot; first, fine size and shape, white as the driven snow, nice legs and beak, shown in magnificent condition; second, but a trifle behind her in condition, otherwise her equal; third, fine all around, fails in condition. Cockerels a good lot, but hardly up to the cocks in quality; first and second showing best form and type.

Pullets brought out a lot of beauties; first being a bird of true Wyandotte type, fine curves, white plumage and excellent yellow legs and beak; second, the winner of the coveted blue at New York, a beautiful bird in color and shape, her only defect being paleness in color of legs, and the fact that she was past her prime in condition. Third pullet was another fine specimen in type and color, and when at her best would contend with the two highest ones for the blue. Both fourth and fifth were in the same class, there being but little to choose between them.

Taken all in all it was a grand lot of pullets.

Pens numbered eighteen, and the best lot we have ever seen bunched at one time in a showroom. First, a superb pen, headed by a grand male and four very even females shown in the pink of condition; second, another beautiful pen, even in type, sound in color, but not in quite as fine condition as first; third and fourth very close, and honors almost even; fifth, another strong one in females; males not quite up to the ones in other pens, otherwise a close rub.

Partridge Wyandottes another warm class, with the usual variation in type and color that seems to exist in this breed. First cock and cockerel nice in type, with the rich hackle and saddle found on first class Partridge Cochin males; a number of other excellent birds lower in the awards failing in distinctiveness of striping in hackle and saddle, and being of too dark a red to show off the proper richness.

Hens and pullets firs t class, the first hen and pullet being well penciled and having correct Wyandotte type. Second hen a beauty in color and penciling, and winner of color special loses to winner in being too large in back and too much on the Java order, besides failing in comb and head points.

Pens a good lot, first and second being headed by good males in color and size and shape. Third contained four very fine pullets in color and penciling, albeit a trifle off in shape, but male failed to meet the accepted requirements of the ideal blocky Wyandotte, being on the small order.

Buff Wyandottes, as well as Silver, Golden and S. P. Wyandottes, while good classes, did not fill up as they should have done, the first prize in Buffs going to one exhibitor in the single classes.

There was a big string of Rhode Island Reds on exhibition, and much happiness reigned in Red camp when the single combs were admitted to the American standard of perfection.

White and Buff Rocks furnished a number of high-class birds among the winners, the latter, as a rule, being well known.

Barred Rocks are reported as follows by Mr. M. F. Delano, the judge:

A splendid lot of 153 Barred Rocks were gathered at Rochester, and competition was very keen. There were a number of unplaced birds close up to winners, and that will make most excellent breeders. Some of the winners at other leading shows were among the exhibit here and in a few instances were outside of the awards.

Cock Birds (12).—Winner had good head and comb, and nice, even color, combined with good shape. Second was stronger and sharper in barring, but failed badly on comb and eye. Third had a badly frosted comb, and failed in color of tail, and in undercolor. Fourth was a good bird, but a trifle off in surface color. Fifth was wider in barring and not as good in tail.

Hens (19).—First went to a sharply barred bird of good head and shape, her color being clean and snappy. Second, a big hen, losing on shape and a little on tone of color. Third was another clean colored bird, but a little too dark in color. Fourth was more open in barring, good shape and quite clean color, fine back and legs and good head. Fifth, another nice hen and close up, losing to fourth only on shape.

Cockerels (37).—The banner class and a fine lot. First went to the best headed Barred male in the show. Good comb, fine red eye, and nice beak and legs. A very sharply and narrow barred bird to the skin, being extra good in undercolor. His hackle and saddle were one shade lighter than balance of surface color. Excellent in shape. Second loses to first in comb and eye, and shape of back and tail. He is evener in top color, and wins special for best colored male. Third, a darker bird, but nice in barring and shape. Loses on comb. Fourth and fifth, two nice birds, and close up to other three.

Pullets (33).—First was a finely barred bird that won special for best colored female. She failed somewhat in shape, but was large, with a good beak and legs, and won well. Second, another big pullet with too much cushion and fluff. Color clean and snappy, and beak and legs excellent. Third, with more age, was perhaps the best in the lot. She loses now in size, but is good in color throughout, and won shape special on females. Fourth and fifth, both good pullets, and lost a trifle on snappiness of color to other three. Taken al in all, a very good class.

Pens (10).—First went to a pen containing four good pullets that were as alike as peas in a pod, and headed by a clean colored, showy cockerel that won special for best shaped male bird. A good win. Second contained some excellent females, there being best pullet in the show. Did not match quite as well as the winner; cockerel was not as good as one in winning pen. Third failed somewhat on cockerel and size

A Hatching Wonder

The new "CYCLE" Hatcher. The perfected result of the latest discoveries in artificial incubation. A wonder of the 20th century. An entirely original and novel method of hatching and brooding chicks. It requires only the self-supplied moisture of the egg itself. No egg tray doors to open. Regulation automatic and scientifically exact. Holds from 50 to 10,000 and can be set when started with 50 or more eggs per day until its capacity is complete, making unnecessary to fill entire machine at starting. Eggs cooled without removal from machine. Will hatch hens, ducks, geese, or turkey eggs equally well and at the same time. Made entirely of metal and asbestos; fire-proof and will not warp, swell, shrink or crack.

A hen never hatches better or stronger chickens than when setting on the ground, in which event the underside of the eggs are cooler than the upper surface, and the "Cycle Hatcher" is the only machine built following closely the natural laws of incubation covering this very essential point, as well as many others.

When the fresh air enters the machine near the center tube it carries with it the moisture it naturally contains. On becoming heated it rapidly expands as it is carried along the heated surface, and because the upper metal of the egg chamber is still warmer than the incoming air, the moisture is carried along until it reaches a cooler surface, where it condenses, leaving the dry air to rise again to be forced out in waves by the rapidly expanding air above.

It would be impossible to get the same results from a wooden machine or one made from any other absorbing material. In the Cycle the only thing that can absorb moisture is the asbestos felt directly under the eggs, where it should be, which never becomes absolutely dry during the process of incubation.

50 egg size only $5.00. Full particulars promptly furnished on application.

of two females. Fourth not quite fit, or would have changed with third. Too many small black feathers to go higher. Pullets matched well and were large birds of good color. Fifth, a good pen, but not in it with other four, losing on males and females.

White Leghorns and Black Minorcas, according to Judge H. J. Quilhot, lined up as follows:

The S. C. White Leghorns at Rochester, owing to the American Poultry Association cup special, brought out, and they were a beautiful lot of birds. Many a winner at previous shows had to be left in the shade here.

We notice an improvement in shape to what we have usually seen in recent years; i. e., having the curve lines, not angles which came through Minorca blood. The combs were also more free from the double fold and wrinkles than seen of late. The association can well feel proud of the White Leghorn exhibit. It certainly was a credit to the show. The following is a brief description of some of the winners:

First cock, grand shape and color, smooth, clear lobes, comb trifle large, but fine and smooth, fine yellow legs, and in the very best of plumage. Second, another good one, and in the very best of condition, loses to first in width and depth of body and color of shanks. Third, fourth and fifth were all meritorious specimens, but lost on shape and color. First hen a beautiful bird of the desired shape, with fine comb and lobes, good yellow legs; the whitest plumaged bird in the show, so considered by all who saw her, an easy winner. Second, another good one, loses to first on comb and color of plumage; nevertheless a good one. Same can be said of 3d, 4th and 5th.

After judging was completed another hen came to light that had been wrongly cooped. That one might have been in the money had she been in her proper place.

First cockerel, a grand one, the very best we have seen this season, good size, with beautiful yellow legs and beak, and clear plumage. Nice, smooth comb and lobes, and typical Leghorn shape, and, in the very best of condition, an easy winner. Second cockerel, good shape and color, loses on comb and condition of plumage. Will show to better advantage a month later. With feathers not fully matured, third cockerel good in head points and color of legs, loses on general shape. Same can be said of fourth cockerel. Fifth cockerel, a trim little bird of good shape and color, would have gone higher had his eyes not been so light a shade.

There also were several other fine ones in this class that had to take a back seat on account of having light or straw colored legs. But were just within the disqualifying limit, the Standard says a bright yellow leg, and it is authority.

First pullet has good, smooth comb and lobes, typical shape, clear plumage with beautiful yellow legs. Second pullet, another good one, crowding close up, loses on spread of tail. Third, 4th and 5th all good ones. Same can be said of many others in this class, not mentioned here.

S. C. Black Minorcas.—While not a large class, the money winners had wonderful quality, and could hold their own against all comers at Madison Square. Certainly a fine lot as regards size, shape and color, and shown in the very pink of condition.

ASEEL INDIAN GAMES.

A friend of mine in Chicago has had a hard time of it in trying to import from India some native "Jungle Fowls." He began two years ago and after paying charge on a "bunch" from the Orient found upon their arrival that they were nothing more than Duckwing Game Bantams. He tried again, and the second lot were no nearer what he sought, but instead of Bantams were B.B. R. "Show" Games. Again he tried, and this time had the help of Hagenback's Indian agent. When the third lot came they proved to be that rare old Indian breed known as "Aseels." Last spring he got a second lot of Aseels from the same source, paying 300 rupees for the cock alone. In one of the same journals was printed a picture of the imported "jungle fowl," which the importer supposed them to be, and I at once made the discovery, as did Dr. Clark and doubtless others, that the importer had Aseels. An article by me in the same press brought a letter from the importer saying that he too had come to the conclusion that his fowl were Aseel and later he sent me a stag, which shows for itself to what class these fowls belong. And from this stag alone it can readily be seen how Mr. Frayne, the elder, produced his famous Cornish Indians, which, as everybody knows, strongly resembles the Aseel and was, according to English authority, originally much from Aseel blood, bred to size by Malay and English Game. This stag from the Indian bred stock has exactly the color of the Cornish Indian of to-day, and the same type throughout, except lower tail and perhaps narrower feathers. I have been breeding two English strains of Aseels for years and this stag is of the same type, and will prove a valuable acquisition to my yards by introducing fresh blood. In England and in India, too, the Aseel is bred to various colors, but the type is always the same; but in India the popular, or at least the common, color is like the stag I mention, practically that of the Cornish Indian. My first Aseels, which I secured nearly fifteen years ago, were of the Atkinson strain and were black. From these I secured snow white ones and now breed a pen of snow white birds. From this same stock I have also reds, and from what is known as the Rossiter strain, which were white, black, red and spangled, I have produced blue specimens. Of course, the Aseel has not been bred for show purposes, except certain strains in England, and all colors have been bred together in this country, so that from one color one is liable to produce a variety of shades, but by sorting the white ones, as I have done, or by carefully selecting and breeding to any substantial color one can fix it to breed as true as in the case of any other fowl. I think, however, the "Cornish Indian" color is the easiest to establish and perpetuate.

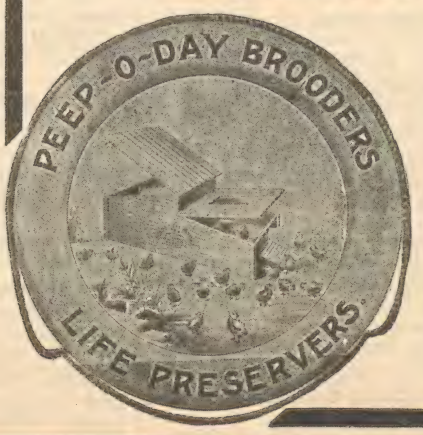
CORNELL INCUBATORS

INSURE LIFE TO FERTILE EGGS



REASONABLE attention and care are necessary in the successful hatching and rearing of poultry Even mother hen has to attend to business in order to carry a brood of chicks through the period of babyhood. CORNELL INCUBATORS are automatically regulated, easily ventilated, and require little attention—five to ten minutes twice a day will do the business on a 216 egg machine.

Peep-O'-Day Brooders are Life Preservers

Baby chicks should be looked after oftener than twice a day. But two minutes, five or six times a day with PEEP-O'-DAY BROODERS until chicks are ten days to two weeks old, is all that is required. After that three or four times a day is enough. If you do not already know from experience that Cornell Incubators and Peep-O'-Day Brooders are the Acme of Perfection in poultry hatching and rearing, write at once for free catalog.

Trinity School for Girls,
ST. AUGUSTINE, FLA., Aug. 19, '03.

The Cornell Incubator Mfg. Co., Ithaca, N. Y.:

Dear Sirs—The Incubator and Peep-O'-Day Brooder bought from you in May have more than proved your statements. An incubator was entirely new to me, but by following your directions, the first hatch was 75 per cent of the fertile eggs; the second was 87 per cent, the third 80 per cent. During this last hatch I had to be away for 36 hours during the second week and a six-year-old child managed the temperature, cooled the eggs (in the incubator) and turned them by hand, after an older child lifted out the tray for her. That speaks well for the simplicity and the reliability of the machine. The brooder has been a comfort. The third brood was put into it two days ago, and all three broods have done well. It is a far better and more trustworthy mother than a hen. About November, we shall need another incubator and two or three brooders, and we see no need to look further than the Cornell and Peep-O'-Day. With best wishes,

Faithfully yours,
SISTERS OF THE RESURRECTION,

IT'S A CINCH

to breed the BUFF WYANDOTTE winners if one has the right kind of stock, SUITABLY MATED. It's one thing to secure individuality, but to reproduce or BREED ON, it's absolutely necessary that a specimen's ancestry for A TERM OF YEARS be of the very best of it's time "Like begets like," OR LIKE ITS ANCESTRY—more often perhaps the latter What does prove a success from a breeder's standpoint is INDIVIDUALITY BACKED UP WITH A RICH INHERITANCE of first prize winners for many generations. So far, doubtless you agree with me. Now, where better can you find the desired NICKING qualities than from a strain that has been successfully maintained before the public since the origin of the breed?

For FIVE YEARS IN SUCCESSION we have won at New York or Boston THREE OF THE FIRST PRIZES; one year winning ALL THE FIVE FIRSTS AT NEW YORK; another year ALL FIRSTS AT BOSTON, save on pen; each year winning MORE FIRSTS THAN ALL COMPETITORS COMBINED . . . . . .

We have birds for sale that descend straight from these first prize winners. Past years matings were headed by such males as follows: 1-3-5 COCKS, 2 and 3 OPEN CLASS, and 1 and 2 PEN COCKERELS, BOSTON, 1903, also the sires of the four mentioned cockerels, Talk about male producing strains, WHERE IS ITS EQUAL? We don't charge any more for OUR KIND than those claimed to be (?) just as good. Write us for anything you want.
We shall sell eggs at $3 00 per thirteen straight, We are now preparing a circular giving our method of mating which has proven so successful. It is free to those who send for it. Egg orders booked now for future delivery, insuring shipment when wanted. (Send for Catalogue.)

INDICATIONS OF PURITY.

In the matter of live stock mere color is too often taken as a guide in determining the merits as well as the price of the thoroughbreds, says the Philadelphia Record. When confined to thoroughbred poultry, where the markings have so much to do w the price to a fancier, the case is somewhat different, and it may be well enough to be governed to a great extent by those markings, or "points," laid down by the "standard;" but when considering the larger breeds of stock—cattle, horses, etc.—it is not the best policy to adhere too closely to any mere fashionable color or marking for it does not alter the economic—the real—value one iota. No matter if a horse does have a "blaze face and three white feet," if he can trot low down in the teens and the would-be purchaser desires speed, a high price can always be secured for him. Even if a Jersey cow is "off color" and does not have the "black tongue and switch," provided she not only produces extra fine calves, but is an exceptionally good and heavy butter producer, she will always bring a good price if the owner can be induced to part with her, which is not often the case. To secure uniformity of breed characteristics it may be well enough to adopt certain marks and colors in some kinds of live stock, but it is, and has been, carried to an extreme and in nothing more so than in poultry as well as in Jersey cattle. What should be desired is an animal bred for "business" first and after that may follow the "fancy points."

BARRED AND BUFF ROCKS.

I have won the past season at the following shows: Fitchburg, Mass., Stamford, Conn., South Framingham, Mass., Manchester, N. H., New Bedford, Mass. The above Barred Cockerels were all sired by 3d cockerel 1903, Madison Square Garden, New York winner, 63 cockerels in this class. Reliable Poultry Journal February, 1903, liked this cockerel above all others in the show. I have a few cockerels sired by above cockerel for sale from $4.00 upwards. Standard weight of very even color, barred well all over. If you want to improve your blood these cockerels are what you want Money returned if birds don't suit you. I have had my pens mated up by one of the leading Poultry Judges in America—4 pens headed by high scoring cockerels. I have also one pen of Buff Rocks. For the cockerel in this pen and two pullets I gave Mr. Higgins, of Orange, Mass., $75. I have not many sittings to dispose of therefore have your orders booked early. My eggs will be from same pens as I breed from myself Choicest Eggs $2.00 a sitting.

PLYMOUTH ROCKS.

OVERBAUGH'S BUFF ROCKS ARE PURE "NUGGETS."—The greatest prize winning strain in the world. Breeding Buff Rocks our only business, all birds line bred for generations. We never exhibit, but make a specialty of furnishing exhibition birds for the big shows. We raise and sell annually more prize winners than any other breeder in the world. We cut out the sale of eggs, so are in shape to furnish birds from one of the largest and best flocks of Buff Rocks ever produced. Remember, we never exhibit, so are not afraid to sell good stuff. All stock shipped on approval. If not satisfactory we refund your money and pay return charges. That's fair, isn't it? W. H. Overbaugh, Hanover, Pa. Successor to H. S. Burdick. 18-69

MILLVILLE YOUNGSTERS WILL WIN and breed winners for you. We have the grandest lot of Barred and Buff Rocks we ever raised, every one line bred from our winners at New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and other National shows. We offer you sure winners and carefully mated breeders in young and old. We can and will please you, and our catalogue will tell you why. Will you ask for it? Millville P. Farm Co., Box A, Milville, N. J. M. F. Delano, President. 22tf ly two years ago, at Hagerstown, nd, the American Light Brahma s organized. John L. Cost, of Blue Ridge Mountain city, was igator of the aforesaid society, worthier instigator never lived. L. Cost is a Light Brahma biped om toe to crown. He loves the breed nd I venture to say, the breed loves him. That is why the picture of the originator of the club finds a place in these pages. Mr. Cost is a man of considerable breadth physically, which is nicely balanced by the broadness of his mental functions. When seven of us sat in a tent and organized the American Light Brahma Club, there was but one goal we aimed at, viz: The advancement of the Light Brahma fowl and the determination to promulgate its magnificent qualities through the good offices of the club. That we were successful the pages of the catalogue issued by the club may or may not testify to.

By J. H. Drevenstedt.

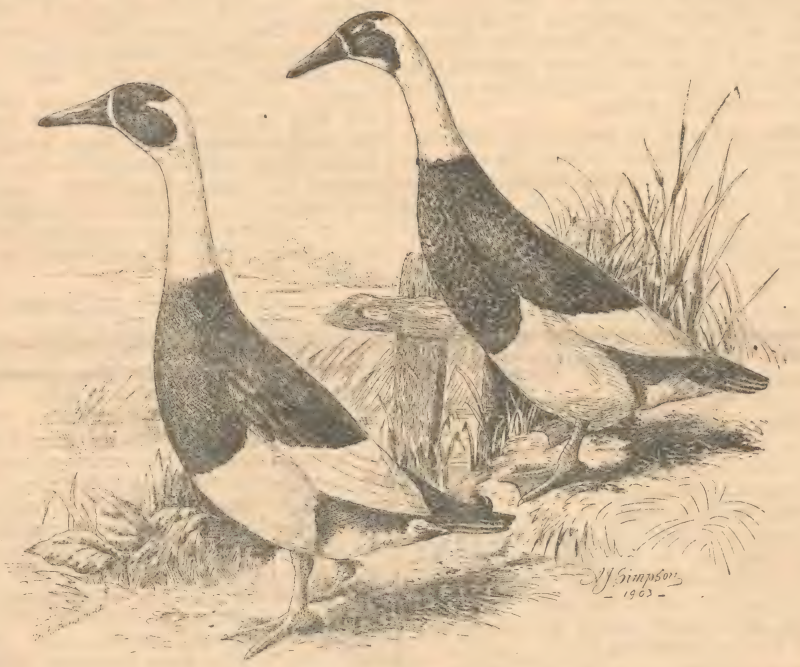
The real inside history of this club is an open book to all who care to consider the unselfish desires of a lot of Light Brahma enthusiasts. We love the breed and propose to keep its lovable qualities before the discriminating and intelligent fanciers of the United States and Canada. In organizing the club we were fully aware of the existence of the New England Light Brahma Club, an organization composed of the very best fanciers in New England. What they did to maintain the Light Brahma's supremacy in New England is history. Without them the Light Brahma would have relapsed into inocuous desuetude. Their efforts, however, were confined to one locality, and the inspiration to have a club covering every section of the country was irresistible. So here we are. With nearly, if not all, the members of the New England Light Brahma club now enrolled as members of the American Light Brahma Club, we hope to annually place before the poultry fancy a book that will be a credit to the breed and to the fine lot of fanciers that foster it.

It is with the sincere pleasure I feel, that I say right here that the worthy secretary, John Rumbold, has worked hard to make the club what it is. He is an old Light Brahma breeder of more than one decade, a thorough student of this grand old fowl, a fancier every inch of him, and as square a man as ever entered the ranks of the fancy of America. To him belongs the credit for the catalogue issued by the club.

The Light Brahma, although of Asiatic origin, is an American production. Read what the veteran Light Brahma breeder, Philander Williams, has to say on this subject on another page. My own acquaintance with Light Brahmas dates back to 1883, when I came in possession of some birds from Mr. Josselyn's Atlas strain. The record made by thirty pullets in 1884 of 155 eggs per capita for the year satisfied me that the utilitarian qualities were considerably above par. Besides, the eggs were of a fine brown tint, large in size and saleable. I. K. Felch and his brother, Henry Felch, were then deep in the Light Brahma business and if I am not mistaken, they obtained a record of 162 eggs per capita of the year.



I remember the Felch Light Brahmas well. They were business-bred birds. But times changed and breeding to feather was the rage. In 1889 I spent a day in the late fall with that past master of breeding of Light Brahmas, George Purdue, at his home at Orange, New Jersey. Mr. Purdue had spent years in studying the breed and succeeded in producing the exquisitely pencilled hackles and tail coverts that now are absolutely necessary to a well-bred Light Brahma. Mr. Purdue had a system of pedigree mating as carefully prepared and carried out as a fine engineering problem. There was no guesswork about what he did.

In looking over a grand lot of pullets being prepared for the New York show to be held in the old American Institute Rink, I was requested to pick out the best five birds out of a bunch of twenty birds. It was a hard task but finally the five were placated and then "good old George" remarked: "Now, pick out the best of the five." I did so with a feeling that I was up against a very hard problem. Suffice it to say I failed to meet the master's requirements, and it taught me a lesson. Said Mr. Purdue: "You have the idea of the shape and the general make- up of the hackle and tail coverts, but you fail to grasp the real thing, viz: The look of the bird, or in other words, the character the head gives it." I looked again, and when viewed from the front, the broad crown, the deep-set eye with slightly hanging brow, led me to believe that type makes the breed, and what I believed was the winner on mere outline and fine penciling in hackle and tail, failed when the real test was applied. One bird in particular was a star in the intense striping of the hackle. But Mr. Purdue said: "The hackle does not meet at the throat-latch, the latter being smoky; the head is too peaked and devoid of character."

Light Brahma fanciers of America, this was a lesson never to be forgotten. It was the eye of an expert that saw what the layman failed to discern.

Since that day many other experts have entered the field and the magnificent records of these men are fresh in the minds of all. Beginning with rare old Philander Williams, the Sharps, of Oakland farm, Wheeler, Keating, Shaw, Rollins, Fletcher, the veteran, Nettleton, and others in New England; John L. Cost, Gibson T. Williams, Roberts, John Rumbold, Nevius, Woodcrest Farm, G. S. Moore, Snyder, Thomas, in the Middle, Southern and Western States; besides others throughout the country, the Light Brahma of to-day is a magnificent result of the fancier's art. The illustrations in this catalogue are from feathers that were plucked from America's finest specimens. They are reproduced as nature made them. Study them and compare them with the feathers from the birds of twenty years ago and will note the wonderful ad the Standard description; all other points being equal the bird nearest the Standard weight should win. The Standard weight is ideal; excess of weight removes the specimen from the latter and oftentimes induces a coarseness that destroys the fine lines demanded by the Standard.

In judging Light Brah briefly state: Shape typical specimen

ABOUT EGGS.

By G. Bradshaw.

That product of domestic poultry and common article of food—the familiar egg—has always been highly esteemed as a delicate, agreeable, and nutritious diet. Eggs are prepared in various ways, and enter into the composition of many dishes either alone or in combination with other articles. They vary in size, color and quality almost as much as the poultry that produce them. In connection with hens' eggs the size of the fowls does not govern that of the eggs they produce, this being a matter more of breed, and occasionally families of the same breed have peculiarities in respect to the size of the eggs they lay. Speaking generally, what is known as the Mediterranean or non-sitting breeds lay larger eggs than do the Asiatics, the enormous Buff Cochin fowl being credited with the smallest.

The breeds also govern the color of the eggs, the Asiatic sorts laying the various shades of the much admired brown, while all the varieties included in the Spanish race produce those with white shells, as do the majority of the French breeds, such as Houdan, La Fleche, Creveceurs, Le Mans, &c. This coloring is so true an index of the race that when an occasional Leghorn or Minorca lays a tinted egg it is pretty safe to say that she has some Asiatic blood in her veins. A peculiarity is worth noting here, namely, that while most breeders have had expereince of an apparently pure-bred bird of the Spanish race laying a tinted egg, it rarely happens that an Asiatic fowl produces an absolutely white one.

As to what governs the color and shape of eggs, ornithologists have advanced more than one opinion; however, for the present purpose it is safer to acknowledge ignorance than hazard speculative theories. Suffice to say that nature's law controls the character of the birds' plumage, as it does the size, shape and color of their eggs, and that the shape and color is no mere accident, but possibly a provision for the protection of the species or other wise cause. Concerning the weights of eggs—taken a given number of white eggs and brown, irrespective of the breeds of fowls which produce them, Hamburgs excepted—those with the white shells as a rule weigh the heavier.

Coming to quality, it was a long entertained idea that the color of the shell had something to do with the quality of the contents, brown-shelled eggs being assumed to be richer in nutriment than those with a white covering; this assumption is now becoming dispelled. Several of the United States Experimental Stations some time ago went into the subject thoroughly ,the result of the exhaustive experiments determining that the color of the carbonate covering was no key to either flavor, nutriment, or other quality. That there are eggs rich, and others weak, in nutritive ratio is true. This, however, is the result of feeding, and the condition under which the fowls are kept; soil, climate, environment, and food all contributing to the fact that eggs vary in the several essentials which constitute them a nourishing and palatable food; and, taking them all in all, analytical chemists contend that weight for weight eggs contain more nutriment than any other of our ordinary foods, the only waste portions being the shell and water, the percentage of the latter being a mere fraction.

COMPOSITION OF THE SHELLS.

Although eggs are a very common article of food there is not a very general knowledge amongst poultrymen as to their composition, etc. The shell or envelope is composed according to the breed which produces it, and is composed of carbonate of lime, phosphate of lime, and animal gluten; salts of lime causing the particles to adhere. Soft eggs are either eggs without a shell, or the shell may be so thin as to feel soft through the deficiency of salts of lime. It is a matter of surprise where a hen finds all the lime necessary, for if she lays 150 nominal sized eggs in the year she will have produced 2 lbs. of pure carbonate of lime. Mr. P. L. Simmonds, F. L. Z., on this subject in the Journal of the Society of Arts, says: "If a farmer has a flock of 100 hens, they produce in egg shells about 137 lbs. of chalk annually, and yet not a pound of the substance, or perhaps not even an ounce, may be found on the farm. The materials for the manufacture are found in the food consumed, and in sand, pebbles, brick-dust, pieces of bones, etc., which hens and other birds are continually picking from the earth. Their instinct is keen for these apparently innutritious and refractory substances, and they are devoured with as eager a relish as the cereal grains or insects." If hens are confined to barns or out-buildings, it is obvious that the egg-producing machinery cannot be kept long in action, unless materials for the shell are supplied in ample abundance. If fowls are confined in a room and fed with any of the cereal grains, excluding all sand, dust, or earthy matter, they will go on for a time, and lay eggs, each one having a perfect shell made up of the same calcareous elements.

A distinguished chemist confined a hen for ten days and fed her exclusively upon oats, of which she consumed 7,474 grains in weight. During this time four eggs were laid, the shells of which weighed nearly 400 grains. Of this amount, 276 grains were carbonate of lime and 10 gluten.

The object of this experiment was to test the reserve stock of shell substances in the hen's body at the time of confinement, as oats are very deficient in carbonate of lime. The hen discontinued laying, hence the conclusions were not definite, but it was thought, had she continued laying for a time,the eggs would have become shelless, or al most so.

The shell is porous to such an extent that when examined by a microscope it has quite a sieve-like appearance, and is permeable by the air, otherwise the chicken could not live during the incubating period.

This porosity of the shell, although absolutely necessary when the eggs are to be incubated, is detrimental when such have to be used as an article of food, from the fact that by means of these minute perforations there is a continual evaporation, so that from the time the eggs are laid until consumed there is a wasting and deterioration of the contents, the extent of which is dependent on the temperature and other conditions under which they are kept, is being very well known that eggs deteriorate much quicker in summer than in winter—this fact being in evidence in our local markets throughout the year, northern eggs being always at a lower quotation than those produced south of Sydney—and it is the knowledge of this that prompts the preservation of eggs. The main point in all the various methods is an attempt to seal up these pores, and thus retard or completely stop the evaporation.

This evaporation and source of decay has, through latter day experiments, become from a commercial point of view of much less import than formerly, it being now overwhelmingly demonstrated that in a temperature reduced to freezing or a few degrees below that point eggs will keep an almost indefinite time, and it should be here said that although still water will freeze at 33 degrees F., eggs will not do so. New laid sorts can be safely kept from 28 degrees up without fear of the frost cracking the shell, while those of a few weeks old before storing will stand a lower temperature, this resulting from the fact that, owing to the evaporation, there is more room for the contents to expand by freezing without bursting the shell, hence the generally accepted theory that freezing eggs will crack them is but partially correct, there being now in the government export stores at Darling Harbor a quantity for experimental purposes without a flaw and as hard as a rock, and they have been there for the last three or four years.

Concerning this system as a preventive of decay, in 1897, before cold storage was thought of here or practically entertained, I wrote the following in the Gazette, and the predictions, although then freely criticised, have now to the fullest extent been realized:

"However practicable any or all the systems may be, the freezing chamber or cool method is for all purposes the best. The only thing to do is to pack the eggs in boxes or other receptacles, and keep in cool chambers, at a temperature slightly above freezing point; and there is no further trouble. With this temperature the eggs can not only be kept an interminable time, but can be sold as new laid and fetch top market price. Nor is there any deception in describing them as such, for in a temperature as mentioned everything in the egg is held in suspense. There is no process of decay; consequently they retain all their original qualities, which cannot be said of those treated by many other processes. The one great handicap to this plan is that it cannot be generally adopted from the fact that there are at present no cold storage chambers with a proper and continuously regulated temperature; and were there such, and a moderate charge made, I feel sure they would be well patronized; nor need there be any doubts as to the nature of the results. Possibly the most important and interesting circumstance in connection with the cold storage of eggs is the fact of a complete suspension of the manifestations of life, and the reversal of this when placed under a hen after many months in the cold stores. Should the temperature fall below 30 degrees, and the eggs freeze, all vitality will then be destroyed; but if over 32 degrees and under 40 degrees, eggs five months old have been known to hatch; and how long this vitality can be held in such suspense has not yet been determined. Before leaving this subject I should observe that the possibilities of the egg trade, through the instrumentality of cold storage, are very great, and I look forward to the time when huge quantities will be stored in this way during the cheap season, and kept until the scarce time, which would do much to restore an equilibrium in the summer and winter prices, and still further assist in making poultry breeding as valuable an adjunct to the farm as it should be."

No sooner had the Agricultural Gazette containing the above extract got distributed than inquiries began to arrive at the secretary's office about the practicability of the new system. The majority of the correspondents, while placing faith in the statements of cold air being a perfect preservative, hesitated to subscribe to the remark that the eggs could be kept an interminable time, while a few doubters pronounced the thing a theoretical fad, and recited authentic instances where the cold process had been tried in city establishments, resulting in absolute failure. Happily, however, during the time these discussions were going on, experiments were being conducted at the Government Cold Stores, the result warranting the Board for Exports placing a cool chamber, regulated to the proper temperature, at the disposal of farmers and others wishing to test the possibilities of this hitherto closed road to the rightful earnings of their flocks.

The confidence of the producers in this system, untried prior to 1898, was evidenced during the past year, the Secretary to the Board for Exports showing in his last annual report that for the season there were stored at the export depot 4,008 cases, numbering 144,288 dozen—or nearly one and three-quarter million—eggs, the majority of which were stored in September and October, and delivered in their original state during the following April, May and June. That many of these were not, nor could not, be sold as absolutely new-laid arose not from any fault of the system, which cannot be more perfect, but rather from the fact that in some instances two or three weeks elapsed from the time they were laid until stored.

It may be here mentioned that many million dozen of eggs are stored annually in the great cold rooms of New York, Chicago, and other big cities of the United States, but in every instance provision is made for turning the cases weekly or monthly, with the object of preventing the yolks from adhering to the shells by being allowed to remain too long in one position. The system as in operation as the government cold stores, Pyrmont, obviates all the above labour, and from the time the case or cases of eggs are placed in position in the cold rooms, they are not moved in any way until such time as they are required by the owners, whether the interval is the usually short one of a few weeks or the more regular period of five or six months. Another theory which obtained in the early days of cold storage was to the effect that all eggs should be packed with the large end down; and although a few depositors still pack them in that position, it is now placed outside the region of doubt that the labor involved in doing so is lost; it does not matter a snap whether the eggs rest on either side or end. If fresh when stored and kept in the proper thermometric and barometric conditions they undergo no change. The barometrical conditions are the most important, and to these being faulty is due the great losses which resulted a few years ago in more than one city cold store.

FORMATION AND PRODUCTION OF AN EGG.

Anyone, upon opening after death the body of a hen, will find a cluster of eggs in formation much like a bunch of grapes, and called the ovarium. These, however, are but rudimentary eggs, and I have counted as many as seventy in one bunch, and are in size from a pin's head to the full-sized yolk of an egg. Each of these eggs is contained within a thin transparent sac and attached by a narrow pipe or stem to the ovary, and during the laying period of the hen these eggs are maturing and thus keeping up the supply which she lays. These rudimentary eggs have neither shell nor white, consisting wholly of yolk, on which floats the germ of the future chicken; and as they become larger and larger they arrive at a certain stage when, by their own volition, weight, or other cause, they become individually detached from the bunch and fall into a sort of funnel leading into a pipe or passage way called the oviduct—this organ in the hen being from 22 to 26 inches long. During the passage of this egg or ovum to the outer world it becomes coated with successive layers of albumen—the white—which is secreted from the blood-vessels of the oviduct in the form of a thick glairy fluid, and is prevented from mixing with the yolk by the membrane or sac which surrounded it before it became detached from the cluster. It is also strengthened by a second and stronger membrane, formed around the first immediately after falling into the funnel, and having what is like two twisted cords of a more dense albuminous character, called by anatomists chalazes, which pass quite through the white at the ends, and being, as it were, embedded therein, thus preventing the yolk and germ from rolling about when the egg is moved, and serving to keep the germ uppermost, so that it may best receive the heat imparted during incubation.

It is during the passage of the egg through the lower part of the oviduct that it gets covered with the two skins which are found inside the shell. These, although lying close around the egg, at the thick end become separate, and form what is called the air-bubble or chamber. This, in newly-laid eggs, is a mere speck, and is that portion which shows the result of the evaporation previously referred to. This speck of air space becomes daily larger as the eggs get older, and is frequently equal to one-fourth of the entire egg. This egg-chamber, if perforated with the finest needle, will prevent the egg hatching. When the egg has advanced more than half-way down the oviduct, it is still destitute of shell, which begins to be formed by a process of secretion, and when about completed the various shades of brown and tinted coloring matter is imparted in those breeds in which colored eggs are peculiar; sometimes in very brown eggs white spots appear, but which can readily be rubbed off. When the shell and coloring is complete, the egg continues to advance along the oviduct till the hen goes to nest and lays it.

Eggs are produced from the surplus foods, which is that over and above what is required for the sustenance of the hen, and if such is too stimulating, or given in excessive quantities, the result is that in the former case the ova are produced so rapidly that sometimes two of them drop into the oviduct together, which results in the eccentricities which frequently puzzle the poultry-keeper. These ova travel together along the passage and receive the white separately, but become enveloped in one shell, and when laid are commonly known as double-yolked eggs, but more properly it is a double egg, the white being duplicated as well as the yolk. Should these yolks be fertilized and the egg hatch, we get the occasional four-legged or other chicken monstrosities. A further result of stimulating food is varied from the above when the ova mature in excess of one a day. In place of falling into the passage in pairs, as above, the two drop in separately, but on the same day. This results in soft eggs, not from the want of shell-forming material, but rather because the shells cannot be formed as fast as the mature egg is ready for such covering. Crooked eggs are no uncommon thing in the poultry yard, and are attributable as follows: Twenty-four hours are usually sufficient for the formation of a perfect shell, but when by stimulation a second ovum falls close on its predecessor, reaching it before laid, the second egg, which is up to this time soft and is lying against the hard one, becomes covered with a shell, and when laid presents a flat or crooked side, the result of its position against the hard one.

To over-feeding is also attributable the further irregularity of one perfect egg being found within another, and caused by irritation of the oviduct, which, contracting in front of the perfectly-formed egg instead of behind it, forces it back until it meets another yolk, when the two join and again become coated with the white and the shell, thus producing another wonder. Other abnormalities are occasionally seen, and particularly in the small poultry yards. Sometimes when the ova are nearly exhausted by continuous laying, the secreting organs may be most active, which results in small marble-sized but perfect-looking eggs, which are merely a shell covering a portion of albumen. Such "eggs" when laid have the peculiarity of never having been at any stage attached to the ovary, but are a product only of the oviduct.

To the internal fatness of a hen is due other eccentricities than those mentioned, including the apparently paradoxical feat of laying rotten new-laid eggs, this being a not infrequent occurrence. The egg, being unable to force its way through the fatty oviduct, is retained two or three days near the mouth of this organ, and, if a fertilized one, the heat of the hen's body tends to putrefy it, and when ultimately laid it is in an addled condition. To other causes, but principally diseased organs, is due a departure from the normal in the way of color. A hen which lays white or brown eggs, on rare occasions produces one almost black, while at other times these vagaries much resemble the dark green of the emu's eggs, and, in most instances, the shells are rough, wavy, corrugated, or otherwise irregular. Then there are the instances of foreign matter being found in eggs, clots of blood being nothing unusual. This is the result of the breaking of a blood vessel internally, and, again, possibly the effect of over-feeding, a more pronounced case being that diagnosed by Dr. Cobb, and reported on page 1030 of the Gazette, 1902, and reproduced here:

"The hen's egg sent contained several abnormal bodies having a somewhat clotted appearance and a reddish or brownish color, and measuring 2 to 3 millimetres across. These bodies upon examination with the polariscope, combined with a chemical test, proved to contain numerous aggregations of carbonate of lime. From this fact I conclude that the walls of the egg-sack of the fowl producing the egg are in an unhealthy condition, accompanied by ulceration of the shell-secreting area. It would seem that some of the diseased portions, becoming detached from the shell gland, are included in the egg. Such appearances are not exactly uncommon in hens' eggs, but it is uncommon to find as many such bodies in a single egg as were found in the specimen submitted."

Fowls from whatever cause producing any of the above misshapen or otherwise faulty eggs should at once be got rid of, for although in some cases a reduced diet may bring them back to their normal production, still the slightest cause will frequently prompt the organs to their previous irregularities, the fowls thus becoming unprofitable members of the flock. As has been seen, the majority of the troubles mentioned are preventable ones, and largely due to the poultry keepers' mistaken kindness in over feeding, but there are other ills of a more serious nature than those mentioned. The producing organs are of a most delicate nature, and, from the amount of work they have to do, are not only easily disarranged, but are subject to a variety of diseases, the nature of many of them being unknown to the ordinary poultry breeder.

Within the first five months of the past year, over 115,000 head of poultry were treated at the Export Depot, and, as the internals of all these had to be removed before export, it can readily be seen that there were vast opportunities for investigation, and without pretending to much knowledge in defining the nature of the ailments it was apparent to those most innocent of pathology that from 5 to 10 per cent. of the poultry treated were subject to some form of disease of the reproductive organs. The field for investigation and research on these matters is so wide and the subjects so numerous that it is hoped Dr. Cobb may, in the near future, find time to diagnose a few of the important cases at present being preserved in the cold stores, and demonstrate to the poultry breeder the nature of the many diseases which have developed in latter day poultry keeping, and, by means of publicity in the Gazette, make known the successful methods to be applied in treating those members of the flock which are largely responsible for the aphorism that "poultry don't pay."—Agricultural Gazette, New Zealand.

SATURDAY, MARCH 19, 1904.

FROM THE EDITOR'S PERCH.

The publishers of The American Fancier are not in any way connected with the American Fancier Co., recently organized at Indianapolis. A very definite agreement was entered into, signed and duly witnessed, on February 27, 1904. The use of our name when acknowledging receipt of letters, etc., without the information that The American Fancier was no longer at Indianapolis and that all advertising, subscription lists, etc., belonging to it were being removed to Johnstown, hardly meets the requirements of the contract. The first issue of the new paper "had only changed its name, no other material changes being made." Quite true! We did not grudge our advertisers the free advertising, but as the circumstances were, we would hardly call it "editorial courtesy" to "remark that some lightning changes have taken place and this company has not missed issuing its paper promptly every week since its inception in February." The fact that the first issue in February was not delayed was due to a trust, backed up by every possible assistance at this end, and the first issue of the new publication to the fact that our advertising, which was in type, was used to fill up the paper until other advertising could be secured. We do not object to clipping, if due credit is given. In this case it was decidedly misleading, and demanded an explanation.

The most unique catalog of chicken novelties, especially rare Bantams, is the one just sent out by Dr. A. H. Phelps, Glens Falls, N. Y. It is the most complete book of the kind ever published. As many of the rare varieties described are recently imported from foreign countries, lovers of the odd and rare will find a treat in reading the doctor's catalog.

The first catalog issued by C. A. Cyphers, Buffalo, N. Y., describing his new Model incubators and brooders is a very comprehensive and handsome book, albeit compact in space. The illustrations are excellent. It is almost needless to state that Mr. Cyphers is recognized as one of the greatest experts in incubator building and artificial hatching in the world. His past record is a fine and lasting testimonial to his skill and ability.

John Rumbold, secretary of the American Light Brahma Club, describes his first visit to New York and the Madison Square Garden on another page of this issue. It is not very often our old friend John gets away from home, but he enjoyed it immensely in dangerous Gotham. Thanks to the chaperonage of the other John—John L. Cost, the two Johns did not get lost in New York. But they hung close together, and as they passed out of the Ashland House door, arm in arm, Senator "Dave" Nichols, the famous Lakenvelder judge, remarked: "Comrades." That's what they were and are to-day.

The following clipping from the Maryland Journal of Towson, Md., will interest breeders of thoroughbred poultry:

The question has often been asked, "Does it pay to keep chickens?" This has also been a fruitful subject for discussion at meetings of farmers' clubs and other organizations having the interests of the ruralists at heart. That it does pay is evidenced by the close watch kept upon the returns of the "Hampton" poultry yards,which breeds exclusively barred Plymouth Rock stock and of which Joseph Phipps is the efficient manager. In summing up the year's work, which covers a period from February 1, 1903, to February 1, 1904, Mr. Phipps gives in detail the acactual work of 40 hens and 5 males. The income from chickens and eggs amounted to $536.28. He has retained 40 hens and 5 males, with which to start another year's work. Besides the above he had at the end of the year 25 pullets and the same number of cockerels for sale, the net income of which is estimated at $100. The above figures do not take into account the poultry and eggs consumed by the families, which, together with the prizes won at poultry shows, will add an additional $100, making a grand total of $736.28. These results were not obtained without the accompanying hard work and good judgment. The above facts clearly demonstrate that it does pay to raise poultry, provided it is first class stock and no hap-hazard method used in breeding. There is no profit in "scrubs," which in nearly all cases prove more than a dead expense.

We have known Mr. Phipps a long number of years, and to judge by the quality of the birds he exhibits year after year and the splendid condition they are shown in, we do not for a moment doubt the statement regarding the profit he derives from his poultry.

Our illustration this week is an excellent representation of a pair of Indian Runner ducks, winners at England's great shows. We reproduced this cut from the one that appeared in a recent issue of our esteemed contemporary, The Feathered World.

These ducks are becoming more popular every year and are making progress rapidly in the United States and Canada. They are the Games of the duck family and from a utility standpoint are valuable as layers, exceeding the Pekins in the number of eggs laid per annum, from what we have heard from reliable sources.

Five men will meet at Buffalo, N. Y., next week, to arrange for the publication of the new Standard of Perfection, as formulated by the Revision Committee last May and ratified by the American Poultry Association at its annual meeting held in Rochester, N. Y., February of this year. These men are F. L. Kinney, Chicago, Ill.; D. Lincoln Orr, Orr's Mills, N. Y.; Grant M. Curtis, Buffalo, N. Y.; T. E. Orr, Beaver, Pa., and J. H. Drevenstedt, Johnstown, N. Y. The whole responsibility rests on their shoulders and the poultry public has a right to expect these men to do their duty in giving to the world a book on thoroughbred poultry that will be a credit to the industry and to the American Poultry Association.

Captain Henry William Heaton, the famous fancier of Exhibition Games of England, is dead. This news will be received with profound regret by the Game fanciers of both countries, as Captain Heaton was an acknowledged leader in Game fancy.

T. E. Orr, secretary American Poultry Association, and T. F. McGrew, Uncle Sam's chicken scribe, have been billed to do verbal poultry stunts at numerous farmers' and poultry institutes this season. They managed to be featured at the same shows several times while in New York state. The two Toms can hand out talk in good sized chunks for the hungry farmers after chicken lore. We believe a debate between these two orators would prove very interesting. All that is necessary to provoke it is to have Mr. McGrew start the argument in favor of any old thing and it's dollars to doughnuts that Mr. Orr will take the other side, just for argument's sake.

The editor of The American Fancier has received hundreds of letters in the past few weeks from old friends and readers. As editor and writer of these notes, he has, like other human beings, occasion to get considerably "riled" at times, and especially so in the past month. Consequently, all these kind letters are the veritable oil poured on a turbulent sea. They are a memory never to be forgotten and a vindication of our steadfast contention that the real fanciers are a fraternal body of good fellowship and imbued with true sportsmanship. As much in these letters is personally pleasant reading for the little clan that runs this paper, we must rest content to express our sincere thanks to all for their kind offices and wishes and assure our friends that the motto of The American Fancier—not to devote one-half of its pages to tell what the other half is like, is the only reason why we do not give them publicity.

GOOD FOR SORE EYES.

Editor American Fancier:

The American Fancier has just turned up in its old form and I can tell you it is good for the sore eyes. You know that I like the eagle and my heart is glad to see it back again in its old nest. Do not let it fly away again. The American Fancier is one paper that every fancier ought to support, and if there is anything I can do to further the interests of the eagle as perched on the A. F., just ring the bell. I have advertised with you from the very first number, and all in all the A. F. has more than pleased me. News is what we want and we will look to you for it. I guess the boys will be with you; they ought to be, anyway.

Sincerely,

D. LINCOLN ORR.

By Geo. E. Howell.

Mr. Howell, associate editor of The American Fancier, will furnish weekly reports on the egg and poultry market, and answer all questions submitted to him relating to commercial and practical poultry keeping. When replies are requested to be sent by letter, stamps must be enclosed and letters addressed to George E. Howell, 70 Christopher St., New York City.

Eggs.—Market remains practically unchanged for the week and prices are remarkably uniform and steady, receipts being 67,000 cases for the week, an average of a little over 11,000 cases a day, enough to supply the city market but out-of-town orders were not all filled at closing time Saturday when the last crate was sold and doors pulled down. Quality excellent from all parts of the country—quotations 24 cents, top price, for fancy selected New York state and other nearby sections; Southern and Western at or near 25c flat; undergrades, 18c to 19c.

Poultry—While the egg market has been active, the poultry has been having but an indifferent reception, fancy offerings being in demand only, owing to an over-supply of frozen and held stock that has been accumulating from week to week, dressed fowls commanding 13c a lb. the highest; chickens up to 2c more; capons, 15c to 23c.

In Orange County, N. Y., there is a flock of Wyandottes to the unlucky number of 13, which has placed 180 eggs in the basket, figuratively, during February, while a Plymouth Rock man comes forward with a similar sized flock, striking up the game to 189 in the same length of time.

But Banker Harding of Middletown has been the proud possessor of an ancient hen that has had much to do with the policies and morals of that city. In the eighties she was prized for the prolificacy of her outlay; in the nineties for the outlay of her descendents; when the era of the twentieth century had dawned, the sports cut out the horses and began betting anything from a button to a suit of clothes she would not last a month; but she fooled them all and only succumbed to the inevitable lately, with what is probably a world record as to age—seventeen.

The raising of squabs as a substitute for game is becoming quite an industry, and in the cold storage room of every hotel will be found a supply of this delicacy. As game birds are becoming more scarce each year and the call heavier, the substitute will needs be propagated in greater numbers. The best part of squab raising is the fact that homers, the strongest and most prolific of our pigeons, make the ideal stock birds. Specially arranged houses and runs should be the first move on the board.

Poultry houses generally are the reflected whims of the owner. The substance of the matter is, about every house has to be built to meet certain requirements of the plot of ground it stands on. Open sheds for our pen flocks make it very convenient to care for them, but where the size of the flocks necessitates "stringing 'em out" there is no place for a shed without interfering with the sunlight, and a house without sunlight is wrong. Aim to get the most floor space with the least roof, and the most sunlight with the least glass. Have the roosting poles over a raised platform, both for cleanliness and not to encroach on the floor space. No hallways at the back of the pens for mine; so much more space for absorbing the animal heat of the flock and no returns. I used to enjoy going in the pens in the winter time; the fowls become indifferent to your presence and then, too, mutual intimacy is conducive to winter eggs. A wide door through the center of each partition, with a secure catch, is the thing.

After the chief's powerful manifesto, I suppose I should give "double the number of trading stamps" or something. Seriously, there isn't a particle of doubt the fancy at large will rejoice upon the recontinuation of the publication of the American Fancier in the East, even going to the extent of demanding a weekly of this nature. Let every friend show his appreciation by helping to increase the circulation.

Some time since I received a letter of inquiry from a reader of the American Fancier which, while the writer evidently did not consider it worth an answer, no stamp being enclosed, has frequently recurred to my mind.

The meat of the subject was this: Having a few dozen eggs a week more than his hatching operations called for, not enough to ship to any market, he cannot dispose of them in his vicinity because they might fall in the hands of some neighbor during the hatching season.

I wish to ask if such ideas of covetousness in the present age isn't a step backward rather than forward?

The fancier of to-day pretty generally realizes that competition does not come from such sources; it takes good hard-earned money to produce and exhibit show stock and pay advertising bills, and people having such objects in view do not go to the grocery for their eggs for hatching.

One need only compare the quality of the poultry coming to this market at the present day with that of twenty years ago to appreciate what the introduction of pure bred fowls throughout the country has done for the market poultry interest.

Many a fancier has found a nice pullet or cockerel produced from eggs he has sold to a neighbor, prove a lifesaver in an exhibition storm and a very safe investment in the end.

If your neighbors show a disposition to put your surplus eggs through a course of incubation, make the price right and don't worry about the grocery man; the improvement of each and every flock adds to the wealth of the community at large.

AUBURN, N. Y.

The third annual exhibition of the Auburn Fanciers' Association took place in the Maccabees' Temple, Jan. 18-22. In point of entries and quality of birds shown as well as financially, the show was a marked success. The city was isolated almost the entire week. On account of the heavy rains it was almost impossible for people to get in from the surrounding country, but the crowds of city people that attended prove that Auburn is a strictly up-to-date show town. We mean poultry shows in particular. The classes in most varieties were well filled; about 1,200 birds were shown. Barred Rocks seemed to be very shy. We can think of no other reason than it's being the home of Gardner and Dunning, and that local breeders thought it was no use going against a stone fence, so they stayed at home. As it was, the firm stayed at home, having secured enough scalps at New York. White Rocks were well filled. Winners all very fine, first cockerel and pullet in particular. Buff Rocks strong in young stock. Wyandottes—Silvers, small classes, first hen the best we have seen this season. White Wyandottes fair classes, with some good ones in the winners. Partridge classes well filled. First pullet a gem, best in class. Buff Wyandottes the banner class in show. The state cup brought out some crackerjacks. There were 100 birds in the class, all the winners gilt-edge, some good ones left out.

Buff Orpingtons showed up strong, 27 in single class. 1st cockerel and 1st hen were a pair of stars. 1st and 2nd pullet about even and quality the best. Black Orpingtons were a small class, the winning cockerel and pullet grand birds; a pair of comers. Rhode Island Reds showed 76 birds in Single and Rose Combs. Single Combs showed great quality in the winners; Rose Combs about the ordinary run of Reds. Asiatic class was small, except in Black Langshans, where the classes were all filled with some really good birds. Leghorn classes all showed up well, with good quality—particularly Buffs. Minorcas shy on entries. 1st pullet in Blacks a fine specimen. Whites in Single and Rose Comb very good. Polish, Hamburg, French and English classes all small.

White Dorkings deserve special mention. Black Red and Red Pyle Games held some stunners. Game and variety Bantams a whole show in themselves, the winners as good as the best, the 1st Black Rose Comb hen winning the sweepstake for best bird in the show, any variety. Pigeons made a fine display, over 200 birds in competition. Waterfowl had 40 entries. G. W. W.

NOTES.

The 2nd S. C. White Leghorn cockerel shown by Wm. Bartsch in a class of 13 cockerels was a typical Leghorn, white as snow. Such birds are very rare.

27 firsts and 1 second on 29 entries is a record to be proud of, yet this is the record of W. T. Hume in Game and Variety Bantams. Quality is what counts and is what breeders are looking for.

It was hard work for Partridge Wyandotte cranks to keep their eyes off the 1st pullet and W. A. Wolford was kept busy answering questions as to whether he had many more at home like that one.

John Duncan proved a hard proposition to Brown Leghorn and Black Minorca breeders.

Too much cannot be said in praise of the Buff Wyandottes at Auburn. The quality was of the best, C. H. & A. D. Churchill winning the cup, with J. H. Scott a close second and plenty of good birds left out.

B. D. Miller's White Reds and White Dorkings made a fine record.

A. E. Pierce's show of Buff Orpingtons made a new record for themselves, besides winning special for best male and cash special for best display.

Col. Hughson of Mundy Farms put in the entire week at Auburn. He showed about 150 birds, winning about 100 firsts. Not so bad for the Colonel.

HENS AND THEIR EGGS.

A bright reporter of that brightest of all New York dailies, The Sun, interviewed an egg dealer, and the following knowledge and lack of it is the result:

"There is a lot about hens and their eggs that people don't suspect," said a dealer in eggs and poultry. "For instance, here is an egg that would be a rooster if it were hatched. And here is one that would develop a hen.

"How do I know? I learned it by long experience with egg and their habits. The small end of a hen's egg will be either smooth as a marble or wrinkled like a nutmeg. Some people won't buy eggs that are wrinkled, because wrinkles, they say, are a sure sign of age. That is true, but not when applied to eggs.

"A hen's egg with a wrinkled end simply indicates that it holds a rooster. A hen is always enclosed within the egg with a smooth end. But both eggs taste alike. Each has its proper share of phosphorus, olein, albumen, sulphur, casein and margarine.

"There is water, too, a-plenty in a fresh lain egg, but no more air than there is in a hammer. As long as you

.. Wonder ..

The new "CYCLE" Hatcher. The perfected result of the latest discoveries in artificial incubation. A wonder of the 20th century. An entirely original and novel method of hatching and brooding chicks. It requires only the self-supplied moisture of the egg itself. No egg tray doors to open. Regulation automatic and scientifically exact. Holds from 50 to 10,000 and can be set when started with 50 or more eggs per day until its capacity is complete, making unnecessary to fill entire machine at starting. Eggs cooled without removal from machine. Will hatch hens, ducks, geese, or turkey eggs equally well and at the same time. Made entirely of metal and asbestos; fire-proof and will not warp, swell, shrink or crack.

A hen never hatches better or stronger chickens than when setting on the ground, in which event the underside of the eggs are cooler than the upper surface, and the "Cycle Hatcher" is the only machine built following closely the natural laws of incubation covering this very essential point, as well as many others.

When the fresh air enters the machine near the center tube it carries with it the moisture it naturally contains. On becoming heated it rapidly expands as it is carried along the heated surface, and because the upper metal of the egg chamber is still warmer than the incoming air, the moisture is carried along until it reaches a cooler surface, where it condenses, leaving the dry air to rise again to be forced out in waves by the rapidly expanding air above.

It would be impossible to get the same results from a wooden machine or one made from any other absorbing material. In the Cycle the only thing that can absorb moisture is the asbestos felt directly under the eggs, where it should be, which never becomes absolutely dry during the process of incubation.

50 egg size only $5.00. Full particulars promptly furnished on application.

Dr. E. E. Reynolds, 418 STATE STREET, SCHENECTADY, N. Y.

can keep air out of your egg it will remain sweet and fresh, but nobody has succeeded in keeping it out more than six days without subjecting it to artificial treatment. Otherwise oxygen is bound to find its way through the egg shell's pores, and the only way to save that egg then is to eat it.

"It sounds funny, but the instant you give your egg fresh air you ruin its health.

"As to hens themselves, there is no accounting for the freaks they often show themselves capable of in laying and hatching their eggs. Now, what sort of consistency is there in a hen almost big enough to eat her corn off the top of a barrel laying an egg no bigger than a sugar plum? And why should a hen you can almost cover with a quart bowl get it into her head that unless she lays an egg that will weigh a quarter of a pound or so she is not doing her duty to herself or family?

"And who may account for the purpose that seems to actuate hens in now and then laying three or four eggs at one time, one inside of the other, like a nest of Japanese jars?

"Yet such freaks are only a few that are common in the poultry yards. Out of a setting of eggs one of my hens hatched once, one egg produced a live chick with four fully developed legs and four eyes, while in another egg from which no chick pecked its way I found a dead one with neither legs nor eyes. That extra pair of legs and eyes the live chick came out with, plainly enough belonged to the dead one.

"Now, by what sleight-of-hand did the hen fit out the one with a double allowance of legs and eyes at the expense of the other one's physical make-up and its life? But I suppose she knew what she was doing. She laid the eggs as well as hatched them.

"Yes, indeed. There are few things in nature, I want to tell you, as queer as hens' eggs and their possibilities and the idiosyncrasies of things that come out of them."

A FIRST VISIT TO A MADISON SQUARE GARDEN SHOW

By John Rumbold.

Not having visited a show in the great metropolis of the country before, I was scarcely prepared for the wonderful display that met my view when I first entered the Garden. Have been to some pretty good shows before and some of no mean number of exhibits, but when over four thousand head of the best stock the country produces, together with other exhibits to make up a sum total of over seven thousand exhibits, it is something to cause one to stop a few minutes in wonder at the aggregation. Right in the beginning I have got ahead of my story, but anyone who knows me won't be surprised at that. I was landed in New York at night—a stranger in a "strange land." By dumb luck I got as near where I wanted to go as it was possible to get; and when I found my way to the Ashland House one of the first sights that met my view was the cheery face of genial old John L. Cost, and his "Well, John, you got here," made me feel at home at once.

After getting the inner man attended to, I sallied forth for the Garden and spent a couple of hours in making a hasty inspection of the exhibits and the acquaintance of many whom I seemed already to know; those whose names are as familiar to fanciers as the names of wives and children. There was Rollins, Keating, Orr, Drev., Hillson, Thompson, Sparks, Crawford, Griffith; well, I can't begin to say all, as it would take too much space to hold the names. Say! but aren't they all and all as fine a lot of boys as the country can get together? I think so, and that is enough for John. I missed meeting grand old Philander. I have never met him, but I seem to know him as well, almost, as if I had. I hope he is all right by this time. A sadness was on every one on account of his accident. Have you heard about Philander? was heard from every acquaintance. Every man there had a heart full of sympathy for the grand old veteran. If he don't recover it won't be from the lack of good wishes of every hen man in the country. As I can't write about everything and everybody I would like to, I may as well get down to the exhibits as I saw them. I don't wish to act the part of a critic, but if I differ slightly from the judges I can't help it, as I see things with my eyes, not theirs; but one thing I will not do—say anything harmful to any one exhibitor; nor will I say anything especially in favor of one man's exhibits. All will fare alike.

Being a breeder of Light Brahmas, naturally my attention was first given to them. What a wonder exhibit it was, in the open class especially. With one single exception every bird was worthy a prize ribbon. The first cock is without doubt as good a one as the country has in it to-day. The other ribbon holders were good enough for any show. In hens, the first was not a large hen, but that is all that can be said against her in any way; truly a wonderful hen in color and shape. The other winners were all that could be required. The first cockerel was a "reproduction" of first cock, a grand good bird, but the best one in the line was the holder of fifth ribbon, a fault with one wattle set him where he was. I don't think the fault should have put him lower than second place. This view was held by others also. In pullets there was little to choose. First had the color; fourth had shape and color, except a slight deficiency in primaries—but was standard there, also, and was unquestionably the best pullet in the show. As one man owned both the first and fourth pullets, first and fifth cockerels, no harm was done. Judge may have been right and I may be wrong, but this is as I saw it.

In Dark Brahmas the exhibit was all that could be desired.

In Buff Cochins—well, I never saw so many good birds before. Some kicking over first and second cockerel it is true, but think the best bird won.

In Partridge—an old favorite of mine—the birds generally were magnificent, hens so rich in color it don't seem possible to improve on them. In cock birds, as good if not the best one in the line had to go without a ribbon, while a much inferior bird wore a fourth. Bro. Anderson was sour, and he had a right to be.

In Whites—Well, they were good enough.

Now for the American classes. In Plymouth Rocks I will notice the barred first. Surely such a class was never brought together before. I breed some good birds of these myself and was interested in them. So far as prizes went, seems to me to have been all right, but think the judges would have been at a loss to give any particular reason why one won and another lost. All were so fine, were very few exceptions, that any might have won and few comments have been made. After all ribbons had been placed some world-beaters were left. Boys, any of you can deliver the goods and no mistake. Buffs.—No breed in the catalogue has made the advancement that these have. They, for color and Plymouth Rock quality, are easily the peers of any other variety. What I have said of the barred variety, I say of the buffs. There were lots of as good ones left at the post as those that were more successful, but mostly younger and less developed. If the judge's head ached after he was through it would be no wonder. No fault could be found with awards. Shut your eyes and take a grab—any are good enough. In Whites, the world's best were surely here, and they were Eastern birds, too. Large, white, perfect specimens as grow.

Wyandottes: Silvers—In hens and pullets the lacing was exceedingly fine. In males the top color was faulty, too much brass. This should be bred out, if it takes a leg to do it. In Buffs some wonderful birds were shown. What an improvement over the red-shouldered fellows of ten years ago! They are to-day as handsome a buff fowl as grows, and as good in other respects as well. The winners were par excellent, and I would be glad to own many that didn't win. In Whites—well, they were there in all their glory. Great big fellows, Wyandottes all over. The winners were lucky. Any were good enough for the ribbons. The new varieties are fast improving. Silver Pencilled need more size; breeding from two and three-year-old stock will give better size.

I can't mention what I saw, but I want to say a few words about the great English mongrels—Orpingtons. What any one can see in the buffs when the buff Rocks and Wyandottes are around puzzles me. These two last named are much more handsome with their rich yellow legs, beaks and skin, than the sickly white of the Orpingtons; and for a general purpose fowl they certainly, from an American standpoint, over-cap them a hundred fold, and for a fancier's fowl there is no comparison. The Blacks are a short, naked-legged Langshan pure and simple. Some other blood may have been added, but except for legs and combs makes little showing. Whites are no comparison to either White Wyandottes or Rocks. Talk about brass! they carried it in the back if not in the face. And as for the Jubilees, I can go out on the market and find more handsome dunghills by the thousand, and no doubt just as good also in any respect.

Another new breed I wish to say a word about and that is the Columbian Wyandotte, or rather I should have said variety, not breed. These have in them the making of a handsome fowl, but lack in size and badly off in color. I think their sponsers have put them in the show room some five or ten years too soon and are doing more harm than good by so doing.

In Lt. Brahma Bantams some nice little fellows were present, but size needs paring down by some means. Would like to speak of many other varieties, but I am taking too much space.

Next year may I be there.

PRACTICAL POINTERS.

The Question Box at the Farmers' Institute, Johnstown, N. Y., last week, elicited the following answers:

Is barley a good food for poultry? and was answered by Mrs. Munroe. She stated that barley is excellent food for eggs when mixed with other grains, especially with wheat. Another question, Where should a thermometer in an incubator be placed in reference to the eggs? was answered that it should be placed on a level with the eggs, although it was stated that when the thermometer is above the eggs at 103 the temperature is about right on the eggs. In answer to the question, What is good for lice? it was stated that it is a good remedy to place the afflicted fowls in a box which has been painted inside with some good lice killer and the fowls covered with a cloth or paper, thus smothering the lice. A good preventative is to place sulphur in a box of road dust or sifted ashes for the fowls to wallow in, and the old hen will take care of the lice.

Wood ashes and hen manure were not considered good for potatoes, as the ashes kill the properties of manure. The manure is all right and South Carolina rock is considered good to mix with it.

For eating eggs, Mrs. Munroe gave as a remedy the decayed eggs taken from an incubator. For feather pulling it was stated a piece of salt pork tacked up in the pen for the hens to pick at is an effective remedy.

Horace Havemeyer, - Stamford, Conn.

to breed the BUFF WYANDOTTE winners if one has the right kind of stock, SUITABLY MATED. It's one thing to secure individuality, but to reproduce or BREED ON, it's absolutely necessary that a specimen's ancestry for A TERM OF YEARS be of the very best of it's time. "Like begets like," OR LIKE ITS ANCESTRY—more often perhaps the latter. What does prove a success from a breeder's standpoint is INDIVIDUALITY BACKED UP WITH A RICH INHERITANCE of first prize winners for many generations. So far, doubtless you agree with me. Now, where better can you find the desired NICKING qualities than from a strain that has been successfully maintained before the public since the origin of the breed?

For FIVE YEARS IN SUCCESSION we have won at New York or Boston THREE OF THE FIRST PRIZES; one year winning ALL THE FIVE FIRSTS AT NEW YORK; another year ALL FIRSTS AT BOSTON, save on pen; each year winning MORE FIRSTS THAN ALL COMPETITORS COMBINED . . . . . .

We have birds for sale that descend straight from these first prize winners. Past years matings were headed by such males as follows: 1-3-5 COCKS, 2 and 3 OPEN CLASS, and 1 and 2 PEN COCKERELS, BOSTON, 1903, also the sires of the four mentioned cockerels, Talk about male producing strains, WHERE IS ITS EQUAL? We don't charge any more for OUR KIND than those claimed to be (?) just as good. Write us for anything you want.

We shall sell eggs at $3.00 per thirteen straight. We are now preparing a circular giving our method of mating which has proven so successful. It is free to those who send for it. Egg orders booked now for future delivery, insuring shipment when wanted. (Send for Catalogue.)

BARRED AND BUFF ROCKS.

I have won the past season at the following shows: Fitchburg, Mass., Stamford, Conn., South Framingham, Mass., Manchester, N. H, New Bedford, Mass. The above Barred Cockerels were all sired by 3d cockerel. 1903, Madison Square Garden, New York winner, 63 cockerels in this class. Reliable Poultry Journal February, 1903, liked this cockerel above all others in the show. I have a few cockerels sired by above cockerel for sale from $4.00 upwards. Standard weight of very even color, barred well all over. If you want to improve your blood these cockerels are what you want. Money returned if birds don't suit you. I have had my pens mated up by one of the leading Poultry Judges in America—4 pens headed by high scoring cockerels. I have also one pen of Buff Rocks. For the cockerel in this pen and two pullets I gave Mr. Higgins, of Orange, Mass, $75. I have not many sittings to dispose of therefore have your orders booked early. My eggs will be from same pens as I breed from myself. Choicest Eggs $2.00 a sitting.

FAVEROLLES.

A Famous New Utility Fowl from France

We are indebted to Dr. A. H. Phelps, Glens Falls, N. Y., for the illustration of a pair of Faverolles appearing on this page; also for the description of this breed as printed below. The doctor calls Faverolles "The King of Utility Fowls" and in his new catalogue gives a graphic account of their merits in a cold climate. The remarks of Mr.Marx, the well known practical poultry writer in The Feathered World, England, cover the ground regarding the claims of this breed and are as follows:

"What are Faverolles?" "French mongrel fowls refined by English breeders and bred up to a recognized standard."

"Why were Faverolles mongrelized into existence?" "To produce A GOOD WINTER LAYER IN A COLD CLIMATE, whose chickens also would be hardy, quickly growing into fine-boned, well-fleshed, but not over-large, young fowls, ready for table in a very short time." "Well, what kind of a fowl is the Faverolles, and why do we always put an 's' at the end o its name?" "The name is derived from a district in France, commonly called Faverolles, with an 's' at the end,the same as Leeds or Wells. In type the Faverolles are a modification of the Dorking and Houdan by the mixture of Cochin or Brahma blood. The head is rather thick, neck short, covered well with hackle, breast broad and full, with great width between the short thighs, which should be straight and like the not too lengthy legs, fine in bone. A big coarse-boned bird and a low-set dumpy one should alike be avoided. To my mind the legs should have a small fringe of feathers, and finish with five toes. The long-backed, low-legged bird, with the tail flow, carriage and style of a Dorking, is not a Faverolles. It should rather be a short-backed fowl with a sprightly semi-upright gait and the short, almost bunchy, upright Brahma tail. This description must serve for the hen, allowing her more length of back and emphasizing the width of breast and alert upright carriage. The comb in both sexes should be neat and single, upright and free from excrescences. The head is comfortably finished by a profusion of beard of muffling. The Faverolles, as befits a mongrel, is of divers colors, with a clearly-defined type. For various reasons it seems most desirable for the present to cultivate the salmon variety, so?called from the pretty and peculiar color of the hen. In the cock, the neck and saddle-hackles 'straw,' meaning a yellowish or creamy white. I think the hackles of the cock should be the same color as the breast of the hen, the beard, muffling, breast and undercolor to be black. At present I have not seen such a bird, as white still shows in the feathering. Let the legs and feet be as white and fine in scale as you can breed them. The back may boast a few brown feathers, which often spread on to the shoulders without annoyance. Whatever white there is should be of the same creamy tint of 'straw.' The tail is short, broad in feather, black in color, with bronze or bronze-black coverts. "I forget that the hen is salmon color, preferring to think of her as fawn color. Her neck, back, shoulders and wings should be a fawn brown. Her muffling, breast and undercolor is creamy white. I like her wings to be free from black, but would pass a little in her tail. Her hackles should be laced with the lighter color, making them brown striped, without any black in them. This freedom from black is frequently seen and should be encouraged, still breeders must expect these thoroughly brown-hackled birds to be in a minority amongst their chickens. "HATCH YOUR FAVEROLLES CHICKENS WHEN YOU LIKE, give them a long spell in the nest under their mother, so that they may gain strength, then coop them in the open, and let them take their chance in a decently drp coop, with ordinary food and attention, THEY WILL GROW AT AN AMAZING PACE. These hardy,independent, ever-foraging chickens are almost perfect subjects for artificial rearing. They learn their way into the 'brooder' in a few hours and then may be depended upon always to return home. The FAVEROLLES have made a wonderful advance in uniformity in the hands of English fanciers, though it must still be regarded as a recent introduction. Yet compare its classes with those of other novelties to our poultry yards. It cannot fail to be noticed that the FAVEROLLES ARE MORE UNIFORM IN TYPE AND COLOR THAN ANY OF THE OTHER BREEDS lately brought amongst us. The Faverolles offers scope for the mos experienced breeder of show fowls. AS A UTILITY FOWL ITS STRONGEST COMPETITOR is the Buff Orpington. I have come to the conclusion, after some years' experience of the two, side by side, that the FAVEROLLES are preferable, as they lay earlier and more eggs before coming on broody. SOME NEVER SIT. The HARDY CONSTITUTION AND QUICK GROWTH OF THE FAVEROLLES POINT TO HER RAPID MATURITY, and consequently, to her EARLY AND PERSISTENT LAYING, with a tendency to postpone sitting until a large number of eggs have been laid.

SALMON FAVEROLLES.

"Where production of early spring chickens is sought for, the FAVEROLLES is being used instead of the Dorking, because she lays earlier and more freely and her chickens are hardier and quicker growers."

In another issue of the Feathered World Mr. Marx says:

"Several new breeds have been introduced in recent years to poultry fanciers, some have suffered by the too ardent support accorded them by their introducers and admirers. It seems as if too much praise can sometimes be more detrimental than a little fault-finding. As an instance of the former, there are some breeds which need not be mentioned, pretty in themselves,taking in fancy points, and possessing useful qualities which were extolled and praised beyond their capacity. Everyone was urged to keep them, as they were the best breed yet introduced, and so on. Many did go in for them, to find that they were nothing so very much out of the common, and perhaps no better than some of the old standard breeds. The Faverolles may be taken as an instance of the contrary. Only a mongrel and an ugly one, too, there was nothing in it for the show, although it might be a good layer and eater. Those who had experience of Faverolles knew better. The breed had its many merits and its few demerits; its followers held their peace, confident of success,content with claiming possibilities. Year by year the Faverolles has made a smart step forward. Last year at the club show I had the pleasure to judge the largest number of pens so far shown. This year I have the pleasure of knowing that my awards at the Dairy Show were emphasized by the winning pullet fetching the highest price at the sales, and the winning cockerel the next but one. True to my theme, I do not proclaim the Faverolles to be the fashionable breed of the hour, but when I see it heading the auction list, and a pair of chickens realizing upwards of £25, I begin to think I may have a laugh with older fanciers, who said the breed would never go, for there was no money in it. There is no doubt that the Faverolles' tide is flowing—flowing strong, and nowhere yet near high water mark, and that apart from any advertisement save its merits as a show or a utility fowl."

NEBRASKA POULTRY ASSOCIATION.

The annual winter show of the Nebraska State Poultry Association was held at Lincoln, January 18 to 23, 1904 The large Auditorium building housed the show, and it required every foot of available floor space to hold the coops when tiered up in double-deck style all over the room. It is a mild way to put it, but true, remarks the Nebraska Fancier, that this was the best poultry show ever held west of Chicago, and that the poultry industry in Nebraska is improving more rapidly than any other line of live stock. This Association should feel proud of its excellent business management. Few associations can boast of better business men than the Nebraska Association has in its leading official positions.

Over 150 exhibitors had fowls on exhibition, and every breed and variety represented that is worth breeding and encouraging, as will be noticed in the following report of awards.

The egg display was an interesting and educational feature. This show illustrated how important it is to breed to type and trueness of breed in order to get trueness in color and size of eggs, and thus secure a higher quality and more desirable product for the market. A market for extra fine fresh eggs is being created in many localities where the eggs are contracted for at stated prices the year round.

One of the special features was a Bronze turkey cock, two years old, weighed before shipped to show 48 pounds, weighed at show 43 pounds; cockerels of same flock hatched last May weighed 29½ pounds. A White Holland turkey cock scored 97, the highest scoring turkey in the show. The score throughout was very good, a very large per cent running from 92 to 95, which indicates good fowls carefully selected.

The judges who passed upon this grand display of fowls, and whose score determined the awards, were as follows: F. A. Shellabarger, West Liberty, Ia.; W. H. Russell, Ottumwa, Ia.; S. H. Rhodes, Topeka, Kan., and Adam Thompson, Amity, Mo.

POULTRY TALKS TO FARMERS.

At the New York State Farmers' Institute held at Johnstown, N. Y., March 11, Mrs. Geo. Munroe, Dryden, N. Y., delivered an address on poultry which we publish by courtesy of the Republican, the leading daily paper of this city:

Mrs. George Munroe, of Dryden, was then introduced to speak on the subject of poultry raising and she spoke in part as follows:

The time has long gone by when a person is ashamed to say that he makes a business of raising chickens. You remember when the job of feeding the chickens used to be left to the youngest child, but the hen now occupies a different place on the farm.

In connection with poultry raising, I will discuss three topics, rearing, feeding and housing.

The incubator has nearly driven the old hen out of business, for her time is too valuable to be devoted to hatching and rearing a brood of chickens. In order to get the best laying stock for next winter, the chicks should be hatched in April so they will begin laying in October, and they will then continue through the winter. For breeding stock it is better to hatch the chicks later so that they will not lay until spring. When I am asked as to the best breed of poultry, I say there is no best breed. The greatest difference is not between breeds but in the breeds themselves, and the best must be obtained by selection and breeding from the best producers. In other lines of breeding the farmer keeps the stock from the best mothers, and this should be the case with poultry. This can be done by using the trap nests.

Assuming that you run your incubator according to directions, you take the chicks out when they are from 24 to 36 hours old and place them in the brooder, the hover being heated to about one hundred degrees and the tin floor covered with bran to the depth of two inches. The first food should be the crushed shells that the chicks came out of and you should commence feeding dry food at once. I use the Fidelity food, composed of a variety of cracked grains. After using this food for three weeks use a bone and frame forming food. Every one knows that a fat little calf or anything else never amounts to anything, but that first a large frame must be formed while the fattening comes later. I use Spratt's food, which seems to give the desired results. I also feed green cut bone, although this food is not considered as valuable as it once was, containing as it does only 18 per cent. of protein. Beef scraps are much better for fowls. Wheat in combination with other grain is a good food for the fowls, and this winter in connection with corn, skim milk has proved a great egg producer. A hen is feminine and is naturally queer. She should be given things she likes. Clever is much relished by the hen and clover chaff is excellent for the hens to scratch in. Throw their grain in it and let them scratch it out.

Besides the regular food diet the hen needs sharp grit and charcoal and green food is also required. Cabbage is good but expensive and an excellent substitute is mangel-wurzel beet,which should be nailed up in the pen so the fowls must jump for it. Whatever is good for cows to make butter is good for the hen. Apples are good, but potatoes contain too much starch. They may bse used when cooked in connection with a boiled dinner.

One of the greatest bugbears in the poultry business is the construction of houses. Mrs. Munroe then detailed a house that is very cheap to construct and one which she considers better than the more costly ones. The house, which has a two slope roof, is only about four and one-half feet high at the rear. At the highest point it is six and one-half feet high and slopes down in front to about five feet in height. The roosts are placed at the rear of the house about two and one-half feet from the floor. The building contains no windows and the front is covered with five-cent unbleached factory cloth which is nailed on doors that can be lifted to the ceiling in the summer. In front of the roost is a curtain which is let down and fastened during the winter nights. The rear of the building and roof is covered with three-ply tarred paper. A board floor is used. In this house, which the speaker has used for the past ten years where the winters are nearly as cold as here, her fowls, which are of the high comb variety, never have a frozen comb. The advantages of this house are that no moisture accumulates on the walls, which is very dangerous to the health of the fowls. The cold is perfectly dry and does not affect the fowls as does the cold when frost accumulated on the walls. Glass, it is claimed, makes the house warm in the day time but very cold at night.

It was the idea of the speaker that the fowls are given too much air space overhead. According to the rule used for cattle of one cubic foot for each pound of flesh, the poultry house where six square feet is allowed for a hen the hen house would be about one foot high. The lumber in a house of this character for thirty hens costs about $15.

Mrs. Monroe's lecture was heard with the greatest interest and was warmly applauded. Many questions were asked that brought out much valuable information.

IN THE GOOD OLD SUMMER TIME.

It has been said that summer stories are best appreciated in winter, and I think so myself, and for this reason I have been keeping this narrative hidden away until the frost is not only on the pumpkin, but inside of it.

Last July "Old Sol" managed to get in some pretty good work and I decided that I would start for Johnstown to see what Socrates Drevenstedt could suggest in order to prevent my being converted into a grease spot.

After due time I arrived at the gates of the city where the word "glove" is a password to anything and everything and where, at certain times of the year, the mercury in thermometers is said to congeal. I was received by our editor friend in due and ancient form and through his courtesy was given the freedom of the city, although the keys were not forthcoming, as is the usual custom in such cases—probably on account of serious mishaps of previous guests resulting from their strong Bacchanalian tendencies.

After due deliberation, it was decided that on the following day we would set out for a few days' outing in the North Woods.

Our trip began with a fifteen mile railroad ride to Northville, where is located one of the prettiest parks I have ever seen—numerous hotels with spacious grounds for golf, tennis and all other summer amusements bordering the green banks of the Sacandaga river. And it is here, also, we find the State League ball grounds, which bear mute testimony to the many struggles for supremacy between the various state teams.

At the station we find a stage-coach which is to carry us further toward our destination. At the start, I decided, that as this was the close season for deer, that I could safely sit on the front seat with the driver, but Drev., still retaining the memory of people, cattle and horses slain in this self-same territory (mistaken for deer), decided that the interior was preferable to an exposed position, and accordingly chose an inside berth.

This coach ride was most enjoyable, for at almost every turn a new view presented itself. The road led us along noisy mountain streams, past lakes nestled at the foot of a mountain, through what seemed at a distance impassable forests.

The odor of pine and hemlock mingled with the rich mountain air, made your blood tingle with new life.

As this was my first trip through the Adirondacks, I was occupied in noting the panoramic changes in the landscape; while my companion, inside, was being agreeably entertained by a fox terrier that was taking an elderly lady to the mountains for an outing. Mr. Drev. scored the terrier rapidly in his mind, but could not allow him better than third place—cutting him ten points for pulled tail.

At intervals during the journey, stops were made at small hamlets to deliver the mail and at every one of these stopping places, the arrival of the coach was the event of the day and every inhabitant, large and small, turned out en masse.

After a nine hours' ride, we wind around a mountain, then ascend between two others and come in view of a pretty sheet of water, about six miles long and one mile wide, which is named Lake Pleasant, and it is really more than pleasant to look at—it's beautiful.

This lake is dotted along its shores with neat little cottages, hunting lodges and hotels—the most notable among the latter being Morley's, Osborne's, and last, but not least, Wilson's,which was our goal for the night.

On alighting, we are met by our genial host and his man Friday, by name, Frederick Fish. Mr. Wilson, my readers, is not the "Wilson" with which you are all so familiar—he is a tall, broad-shouldered man, who makes you feel as if you owned the hotel and all that goes with it.

We spent a very pleasant evening here, and at first break of the following day we set forth, accompanied by Fred Fish acting as coachman and footman, with the title of adjutant general (having entire charge of the commissary department.)

Drev. very wisely insisted that Fish should accompany us, as it sometimes takes a fish to catch another, but I soon found that he wasn't a sucker, if his name was Fish.

Our horses were well used to mountain traveling, and combined with the attractiveness of that portion of the day, made the first seven miles seem short indeed.

Shortly after leaving Lake Pleasant, we passed several large buildings located on a mountain stream. This we learn is one of the state fish hatcheries, recently erected, but with poor judgment, as the stream was afterward found to be too small to supply sufficient water at all seasons and, therefore, it was abandoned and the fish, etc., was sent to the hatchery at Caledonia, N. Y. After seeing this, it did not seem strange that Proprietor Wilson had a "Fish," as here was the hatchery.

After a ride of seven miles, we came to a small clearing in which is situated Perkins' famous log-cabin camp—a popular hunting resort during the deer season. It is here that modern methods of raising poultry have penetrated and we find a flock of Barred Rocks—the product of Prairie State incubators. Mr. Perkins, like most of the Adirondack guides, is a very pleasant person to talk to and he entertained us for a short time very agreeably.

Leaving here, we had a nine mile ride and then Mason lake comes into view.

FROM THE EDITOR'S PERCH.

The dates for the Boston show have been announced for January 16 to 21, 1905, at Mechanics' building. It will be held under the auspices of the Boston Poultry Association and that means the old management that was so successful in the past in giving the Hub such magnificent shows as that held prior to 1904. The only regret is that this year had to be minus a Boston show.

To judge by the editorial remarks in our Boston contemporaries, the American Stock-Keeper and Farm-Poultry, there seems to be some friction existing among Bay State fanciers regarding the Boston show to come. We are inclined to believe, however, that Bro. Atherton voices the correct sentiment when he intimates that the old management having engaged the hall and holding the trump cards is the one to look to for the coming show. Bro. Robinson seems to have his usual doubts about things that are going to happen and we believe is borrowing unnecessary trouble in this instance.

A full week intervenes between the New York and Boston shows, a fact that will be greatly appreciated by many exhibitors.

One of our esteemed contemporaries remarks that in addition to the rather large and bulky new Standards of Perfection to be published, the committee are considering the advisability of also issuing a "vast pocket edition." No doubt the compositor is at fault, as a "vest" pocket edition was spoken of at the Rochester meeting. Still, even this "vest pocket" might be a "vast pocket" edition, after all.

The case in court that will be watched with interest by incubator manufacturers is on this week in Erie county, N. Y. It is the Cyphers Incubator Co. vs. C. A. Cyphers, and involves the patent rights, names and sundry other details of vital importance to the manufacturers of the Cyphers incubator on the one side, and the manufacturers of the Model incubator on the other side.

Mr. R. J. Ruliffson was present at the Buffalo meeting of the committee of five, representing the Bantam interests of the National Bantam Association.

Some people forget that it is too late to ask changes to be made in the new Standard, as the committee of five have no authority to change anything. All they are asked to do is to get up the book as ratified at the Rochester meeting and see that it is speedily, decently and thoroughly printed.

The Seattle and Tacoma poultrymen have started a new departure. They will have Pacific coast judges to place the awards. L. N. Cobbledick, Oakland, Cal., and Elmer Dixon, Oregon City, Ore., will place the awards at the Tacoma show; C. G. Hinds, Alemeda, Cal., and Harry H. Collier, Tacoma, Wash., placing the awards at the Seattle show. This is a good move and fanciers along the coast should encourage the employment of local judges.

Secretaries of poultry exhibitions will confer a great favor by sending in the dates of the shows they are identified with early, in order to make our published list as complete as possible before the season opens.

Superintendent of Poultry T. E. Orr's circular regarding specialty clubs at the World's Fair is printed on another page of this issue. It should receive careful attention.

Dr. A. H. Phelps has imported over six hundred birds this winter, including two hundred Faverolles. The latest bunch to arrive are some Black Faverolles direct from France. The bearded ladies and gentlemen from France are evidently making a hit in the feathered world of both continents.

The largest pullet shown the past season is a Black Orpington, winner of first at the Newark show last December. She weighs nearly eleven pounds and is as good in quality as she is in weight.

Printers' Ink, a leading advertising publication of New York city, in its March 2 issue, remarks:

"Printers' Ink has always held that papers which carry the largest number of classified advertisements are closest to the hearts of the people, and for that reason not only prosperous, but of a distinct profitableness to an advertiser."

This is what The American Fancier has always contended, and by glancing over its advertising columns a larger number and a greater variety of classified advertisements can be found than in any other publication in this country. And yet we are not "in it" with the classified advertisements that appear weekly in the Feathered World, England. In the busy months they run up into the thousands each week in that publication.

The annual catalog of the Cloverdale Poultry Farm Co., Keene, N. H., is one of the finest books of the kind ever issued and is a credit to the firm, the printer and the superior collection of thoroughbred White Wyandottes, Rhode Island Reds and Buff Plymouths bred on the several great plants owned by the company, consisting of C. R. Spaulding, N. D. Cass and F. A. Lougee.

The well known turkey expert and judge, Mr. W. J. Bell, Angus, Ontario, Canada, remarks in the Poultry Advocate:

"I have never seen a Bronze Turkey that would score over 93 points with the standard applied as it is generally in the fowl classes."

And yet we find plenty of birds scoring 98 and 98½ points, and under good judges. Why? Just let a judge walk into the turkey alley at some show where the "Thanksgiving delicacies" are abundant in number and score them according to Mr. Bell's idea. What will happen? The judge will never handle that class again and here comes the "Why?" High scores sell birds at high prices. Yet Mr. Bell is right, but right cannot always win when commercialism is the fashionable disease of to-day. Although such inflated valuation of birds is impossible under comparison judging, the latter is not applied at shows where turkeys make a large showing, and more's the pity. Turkeys, like geese and ducks, should be judged by comparison, with due regard for size, type and plumage, and the chances are much better satisfaction will be given. We will leave this question to be answered authoritatively by Mr. Chas. McClave, an ardent score card advocate and an old and experienced breeder of turkeys, ducks and geese. It was Mr. McClave who desired the latter to be judged by comparison at the meeting of the Revision Committee at Buffalo, N. Y., May, 1903.

In-and-in-breeding is the only way to produce fine feathers and, in fact, fine animals of any kind. The opponents of this law of nature, made most of by intelligent breeders, rarely confine themselves to facts, on the contrary rush to conclusions based on a few years' successful experiences with some crosses, and then with one fell swoop denounce the men that believe in the unalterable law that "like begets like" and "blood will tell." We were pleased to read the following answer to one of these "doubting Thomases" in the Nebraska Farmer, by Mr. W. D. Stambaugh, a fancier of more than twenty years' experience:

"The wild birds and animals in-breed. To-day the wild tom of the Bronze turkey is at a premium for improving the domestic Bronze. In this connection we inject a little theory that has not been fully tested, viz., that the great general improvement of the domesticated bird and animal over the wild is not due so much to the elimination of in-breeding as to the better shelter and feed. The most squint-eyed person must concede that in point of endurance and hardiness our domestic stock are greatly inferior to the wild. This hardiness is obtained in the wild stock at the cost of productive yield and size. Turn out any number or variety of our beautiful standard fowls to take the same exposure and hardships of the prairie chicken or quail and see where they will turn up. And these same wild fowl are in-bred since time began.

Here is a true picture drawn by Mr. W. M. Elkington in Poultry, England:

Personally, I think show-promoters should pay more attention to the comfort of visitors. Numbers of fanciers travel about the country to various shows, but quite as many stay away,for the simple reason that they are unwilling to put up with the inconveniences which a visit to a show entails. There are many small shows held in this country to go into which it is a downright insult to ask the public to pay. There is no room between the pens to pass up and down without rudely pushing or being rudely pushed. There is no light to distinguish anything beyond the shape of a bird, and there is absolutely nothing to help us remember the show for anything but its cold, cramped discomfort. Yet a certain number of us are prepared to make long journeys in wintry weather, to pay sixpence or a shilling for admission, another sixpence for a catalogue (the most expensive literature in circulation), and go without our regular meals, all for the sake of attending these shows. The uninitiated may well think we are mad to do it.

We can tell the same tale of woe on this side of the "big pond." The "public--be-damned" policy is not dead by any means. Societies that cater to the gate receipts should deliver the goods when the "good and dear public" enter the portals of its halls and give visitors a chance to distinguish between a Cavy, an Anaconda or Frizzle by having a catalog or the proper nomenclature on the pens.

On April 1 the Plymouth Rock Squab Co. will move their Boston office from No. 9 Friend street to No. 287 Atlantic avenue, near India street. They will occupy the second floor of a new building fitted up specially for their business with every possible convenience for themselves and their customers. The demand for squabs is greater than it has been at any time and prices are much higher.

At the late Rochester show Mr. Geo. G. Burnham, 150 Federal street,Greenfield, Mass., lost a Barred Rock cockerel, and he requests anyone who has received such a bird by mistake to notify him at once.

In the Good Old Summer Time.

Did you ever try to pass another team on a mountain road? The most popular method is to draw cuts to determine which party is to climb a tree in order to let the other pass. I believe that the man who will invent a folding wagon will solve the whole problem, but if the casualties therefrom equal those of the folding bed, I'm afraid that it will not be readily adopted. Mason lake is a very attractive little sheet of water, about a mile long and half mile wide, enclosed on three sides by mountains. At the head of it stands the cottage of Abe Lawrence, whose name is well known to visitors in this portion of the Adirondacks. This was our objective point and the scenery thereabouts was wild enough to suit the most exacting. Abe, as we soon learned to call him, proved to be a splendid guide and an interesting talker, being born and raised in these same woods, he has a knowledge of wood-craft unsurpassed by others with equal experience as himself.

At dinner we all seemed to do ourselves justice, but someway I got the credit for eating more than the rest.

They serve in some parts of the Adirondacks, Rocky Mountain lamb, which is extremely palatable, notwithstanding its long journey across the continent. After dinner our editor companion was delegated to dig the worms, which he did very gracefully, ably assisted by the adjutant general.

We fished during most of the afternoon and succeeded in securing about thirty-five fine lake trout, which we had served for our supper.

In the evening we were agreeably entertained by certain singing insects. These little creatures are coal black, with small translucent wings which emit musical notes as they approach. Their stinger is folded under their bodies and in the adult it is about two and one-half feet long; these they use very effectually. Should you have a sleepless night you would not be alone, for thousands of these little creatures would gather around to comfort you. When daylight appears they retire to recharge their batteries and prepare for another night's campaign.

The programme for next day included a three-mile walk through the woods to the Jessup river, where we had some fine sport fishing for pike.

Thus were passed several very pleasant days, and when it was necessary to return we all felt sorry to break up the congenial tri-umvirate.

The only commercialism which entered into our few days of pleasure was when our editor friend attempted to revolutionize the ginseng industry by trying to convince his friends that witch-hopple was the true ginseng, and in support of his pet scheme he even brought back to Johnstown several specimens of witch-hopple, but the ginseng growers refused to be convinced.

RULISHSTEAD.

STRANGE, BUT TRUE.

After all the bouquets that have been thrown at the American Fancier since its removal west, we find that for some reason it has flown back and is in Drev.'s coop again, but there also comes a new chicken from the west called "Poultry Life of America," and strange to say it has an exact duplicate of a large number of the advertisements appearing in the Fancier. What occasioned this shift we do not know, but the paper lost its identity when it went west and we are glad to see it back again.—American Stock-Keeper, March 19.

CORRECTION.

Mr. Howell, associate editor of The American Fancier, will furnish weekly reports on the egg and poultry market, and answer all questions submitted to him relating to commercial and practical poultry keeping. When replies are requested to be sent by letter, stamps must be enclosed and letters addressed to George E. Howell, 70 Christopher St., New York City.

Eggs.—Receipts for the week, 80,000 cases, due to heavy shipments reaching the market toward the close; in fact, the shortage spoken of in last week's report continued well into the week.

The consumer has just reached the normal, and has started in to make eggs part of the bill of fare. There is no denying the fact famine prices benefit no one; the people become scared and afraid to buy eggs. Although the drop has affected prices for a month or more, the consumer is just commencing to buy freely.

To-day prices range from 19½ cents a dozen, for fancy, nearby, selected stock, and 16¾ for southern and western fresh marks, down to 14 for dirty and cracked eggs.

The week developed a slight demand for duck eggs, with very few offered; price for the best is 35c per dozen.

Poultry.—Live poultry advanced slightly in price, the Hebrew festival days affecting the market, 14 cents being asked and obtained. Some of the dressed stock intended for this market was treated to an application of salt water during a collision in the harbor. Like the famous McGinty, it hasn't been seen yet. There is, however, plenty of undesirable held stock on hand, and very little fancy fresh killed offered. Quotations are: Western turkeys, 16c to 17c; Capons, 18c for Western and 23c for Philadelphia; broilers less than 3 lb to the pair, 35c per lb; Chickens, 15c to 19c; Fowls, 14c and under.

The aim of every egg shipper should be improvement; cut down the number of seconds in the crate, and increase the number of firsts. It ought not to be necessary to say here that eggs which are sent to market every ten days and two weeks do not come under the head of strictly new laid, yet from the nature of some of the egg correspondence I receive, it is not only necessary but nothing short of a club would let in the necessary light.

There is one new point in the process of gathering and marketing eggs that has escaped the retailer, but not the starks who store eggs for the future; that is the value of milk receiving stations as auxiliary egg collecting depots.

In many cases the collectors for refrigerator purposes have the eggs brought in daily and there held in a cool room or refrigerator car until ready to be shipped to the cold storage plant. Notice these men who make a business of storage eggs try to guard against a change of temperature from the very commencement of an egg's existence; then notice that any old kind of treatbent is good enough for eggs destined for present consumption. They lay around the country store collecting dust and subject to every change in the atmosphere; finally they start on their journey and go through about the same waiting process in the commission houses and retail stores; every minute their bloom of fresnness is leaving them.

This is a point which should not be overlooked. The tendency of the times seems to be enlightenment and advancement and the poultry industry should keep up with the procession. The poultryman of to-day must not only get a line on his market, but aim to increase the output of his flock collectively; become familiar with the ability of each member of the breeding pen. No drones can be tolerated on an up-to-date ranch in these days of hustle.

BOX 38, HOMER CITY, PA.

A Worthy Gem

The Gem Incubator has established its intrinsic worth by its wonderful hatching qualities in the hands of hundreds of poultry raisers. "It is certainly a gem" is an expression heard wherever a Gem Incubator or Brooder is in use. Not a high priced hatcher (costs much less than most others) but a hign per cent hatcher. Has many features not equaled in any other machine. Send for new, free catalogue.

THE GEM INCUBATOR CO., Box 100, Dayton, Ohio

Of the different devices in use for keeping tabs on the layers and non-layers perhaps the trap nest is the most effective, in view of the fact that once she enters the sacred precinct of the nest there is no escape, either she must leave the evidence of her prolificacy or be shown up as a fraud, and should she scorn the nest her usefulness in the breeding pen, from which the future generation is to come, is at an end.

It will be seen by this it is the long-headed fellow who wins out in the end. When you mate up your breeding pens you are preparing more for the future than the present. Use the best you have for breeding. Should your flock consist of ten or ten hundred, select and separate the most typical members coming more nearly within your idea of what you aim to produce in the generation to come; mate to a male either himself a superior specimen or springing from such. You will note I place as much importance on the ancestors as the individual. This does not conform to some advice I have read on the subject from a guy who poses as an expert on such matters, but who is so careless of his reputation he allows himself to be quoted thus: "Should the strains become mixed to a slight extent, no damage will be done, etc." Now, how does such advice, even if given to a farmer, strike you breeders who have made a lifelong study of the subject? Why, you say, no half-way measure of this kind; be extremely radical or else forego all hopes for improving your stock.

While the subject is most timely and seasonable, few breeders need any urging in this matter. The prospect of material improvement as to quality leads many an enthusiastic henman to dreams of prizes won and glory attained.

The New York State chickenman is to have more protection from petty thieves, and the dark visioned gentry who begin to smell chicken as soon as the sun goes down, whose olfactory nerves lead them to a chicken coop with the unfailing precision of a hound running on a warm scent, the below amendment being considered at Albany. The bill would amend the penal code by adding a new section to be known a ssection 522A, which provides:

"Any person who steals or unlawfully takes domestic fowl or poultry, in the night,from any building, shed, coop or enclosed premises is guilty of larceny of domestic fowl or poultry and shall be punished by imprisonment for a term of not exceeding two years or by a fine of not exceeding $500, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

GEDNEY FARM

H. WILLETS, OWNER. L. E. ORTIZ, GEN. MGR.

HIGH CLASS

Black Minorcas and White Wyandottes

Our breeding yards not only contain the leading winners at the late New York show, but were selected from yards that have done the bulk of the winning at Madison Square Garden for the past six years. At Rochester we won seven out of a possible ten first prizes.

Eggs for hatching orders will be booked for a very limited number of eggs from yards composed entirely of New York and Rochester winners at $10.00 per 13 straight. All other pens $3.00 per 13; $5.00 for 26.

GEDNEY FARM, WHITE PLAINS, N. Y.

F. W. GAYLOR, Supt. Poultry Department.

A Hatching .. Wonder ..

The new "CYCLE" Hatcher. The perfected result of the latest discoveries in artificial incubation. A wonder of the 20th century. An entirely original and novel method of hatching and brooding chicks. It requires only the self-supplied moisture of the egg itself. No egg tray doors to open. Regulation automatic and scientifically exact. Holds from 50 to 10,000 and can be set when started with 50 or more eggs per day until its capacity is complete, making unnecessary to fill entire machine at starting. Eggs cooled without removal from machine. Will hatch hens, ducks, geese, or turkey eggs equally well and at the same time. Made entirely of metal and asbestos; fire-proof and will not warp, swell, shrink or crack.

A hen never hatches better or stronger chickens than when setting on the ground, in which event the underside of the eggs are cooler than the upper surface, and the "Cycle Hatcher" is the only machine built following closely the natural laws of incubation covering this very essential point, as well as many others.

When the fresh air enters the machine near the center tube it carries with it the moisture it naturally contains. On becoming heated it rapidly expands as it is carried along the heated surface, and because the upper metal of the egg chamber is still warmer than the incoming air, the moisture is carried along until it reaches a cooler surface, where it condenses, leaving the dry air to rise again to be forced out in waves by the rapidly expanding air above.

It would be impossible to get the same results from a wooden machine or one made from any other absorbing material. In the Cycle the only thing that can absorb moisture is the asbestos felt directly under the eggs, where it should be, which never becomes absolutely dry during the process of incubation.

50 egg size only $5.00. Full particulars promptly furnished on application.

TO POULTRY SPECIALTY CLUBS:

The eyes of all fanciers are turned toward St. Louis. All agree that the poultry show of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition should be the largest and best the world has seen.

The best posted authorities believe it will be.

Many of the States are offering special inducements to prospective exhibitors by helping to pay express charges, and are stimulating prospective prize winners by the offer to duplicate their winnings. All this is right. State pride in an international enterprise like this is commendable.

But the object of this letter is to call attention to another kind of pride that has not yet been fully aroused—the pride each breeder should have in his favorite variety. For a limited number of the fanciers of any variety each to enter but a few birds—a small circle winning all the prizes—would mean almost nothing for the future success of that variety.

It is the great extent and high quality of the display of a variety, coming from various sections of the country, that make the lasting impression on the public mind. Here is where the specialty club can do its best work. Its officers know the names and locations of all its members. They can do much to stimulate activity by calling the attention of their fellow members to the great advertising advantages to be derived from an exhibit at St. Louis next October. Several of the leading specialty clubs are already actively at work along this line, circulars announcing the club's own offer of cash, cups, medals or badges to the most sucecssful of its members are being sent out. Some clubs are spending hundreds of dollars in this way and the investment will surely prove profitable. Let others do likewise.

The time is short before the final edition of the Prize-List will be printed; prompt work is necessary. The getting together of a creditable display of your favorites at St. Louis depends largely upon the efforts of your club.

It is the purpose of the Exposition to issue a new and revised Prize-List for the Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Department. Announcements of specials offered by clubs can be given wide publicity in this prize-list if they are filed with Mr. F. D. Coburn, the Chief of the Department of Live Stock of the World's Fair, St. Louis, Mo., by April 1, 1904.

Some clubs may be holding back because of the uncertainty as to who shall judge their varieties. It is too soon to decide this matter. It would be folly on the part of the Exposition management to promise a special judge for each club, or a particular judge for any club. Some small club, with a judge residing at a remote distance, could make the expense of judging a small class ridiculously high. The Exposition will be glad to have specialty clubs suggest several judges, any of whom if appointed would be satisfactory to the exhibitors interested.

All fanciers should understand that having provided the most liberal classification and the largest cash prizes ever known on poultry, pigeons and pet stock, and without exacting any entry fees whatsoever, the Exposition will not consent to have the awards placed by any except the most competent judges. The exhibitors must not question the good faith of the exposition in the matter of awards. The list of judges will not be completed until the extent of the exhibit in each class is assured and the number of judges needed can be determined.

Soliciting the co-operation of all fanciers and specialty clubs, the Exposition will hope to hear of prompt action along the line indicated.

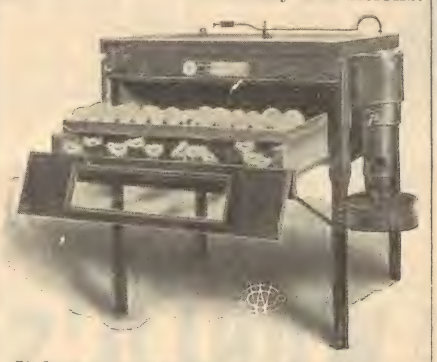
RHODE ISLAND RED CLUB.

The Rhode Island Red club announces that their new catalogue is ready for distribution. The book contains a great deal of information relative to Reds that no breeder of Reds can afford to be without. The origin of the breed, points on mating, effect of different ancestral influences, why Reds are so popular, points to be avoided in breeding, dangers that threaten the breed, Reds as dressed poultry and for the farmer, do Reds breed true to type and color, reports of the vice-presidents from the various states, etc., etc., are some of the subjects discussed.

Besides the usual amount of advertising, there is a complete list of addresses of members, roster of officers, by laws of the club and the latest club standard. The book contains in all about 75 pages and in general appearance is very attractive, being somewhat out of the trodden path followed by club catalogue makers.



The admission of the Reds to the American standard of perfection has given this already popular breed an additional boom which they certainly merit. The appearance of so complete a treatise on Reds at this time is therefore particularly fitting. The book deserves wide circulation and careful perusal. Copies may be obtained by enclosing six cents in stamps to cover cost of mailing, to W. J. Drisko, secretary-treasurer, Everett, Mass.

INCUBATOR CLEANLINESS NECESSARY.

Many experienced operators of incubators have often deplored the fact that many incubators have so little room for the little chicks underneath the egg tray. Then again a few machines have considerable room in this space, but the chick tray is so constructed that it is extremely unpleasant and difficult to thoroughly clean and disinfect the inside after the hatch is over.

To overcome these objections was a problem that set the Gem Incubator people to figuring. A great many incubator users unite in decided that the Gem fulfills the necessary conditions.

It has a commodious and well ventilated chick tray underneath the egg trays. At the end of the hatch all the newly-hatched "puff balls" are resting comfortably in this tray. After the hatch is over, the chick tray, egg trays and everything inside the cabinet can be removed,leaving a large, open, clear space to work in. Every experienced operator knows that an incubator must be free from filth and foul odors if high per cent hatches are to be expected.

This removable chick tray is one of the exclusive features of the Gem Incubator, and commends itself to every thinking poultry raiser.

There are other points of superiority about the Gem that would be interesting to mention, which are taken up in detail in the handsome new catalogue. This catalogue is free. Write to the Gem Incubator Company, Drawer 100, Dayton, Ohio.

IT'S A CINCH

to breed the BUFF WYANDOTTE winners if one has the right kind of stock, SUITABLY MATED. It's one thing to secure individuality, but to reproduce or BREED ON, it's absolutely necessary that a specimen's ancestry for A TERM OF YEARS be of the very best of it's time. "Like begets like," OR LIKE ITS ANCESTRY—more often perhaps the latter. What does prove a success from a breeder's standpoint is INDIVIDUALITY BACKED UP WITH A RICH INHERITANCE of first prize winners for many generations. So far, doubtless you agree with me. Now, where better can you find the desired NICKING qualities than from a strain that has been successfully maintained before the public since the origin of the breed?

For FIVE YEARS IN SUCCESSION we have won at New York or Boston THREE OF THE FIRST PRIZES; one year winning ALL THE FIVE FIRSTS AT NEW YORK; another year ALL FIRSTS AT BOSTON, save on pen; each year winning MORE FIRSTS THAN ALL COMPETITORS COMBINED . . . . . .

We have birds for sale that descend straight from these first prize winners. Past years matings were headed by such males as follows: 1-3-5 COCKS, 2 and 3 OPEN CLASS, and 1 and 2 PEN COCKERELS, BOSTON, 1903, also the sires of the four mentioned cockerels, Talk about male producing strains, WHERE IS ITS EQUAL? We don't charge any more for OUR KIND than those claimed to be (?) just as good. Write us for anything you want.
We shall sell eggs at $3.00 per thirteen straight. We are now preparing a circular giving our method of mating which has proven so successful. It is free to those who send for it. Egg orders booked now for future delivery, insuring shipment when wanted. (Send for Catalogue.)

BARRED AND BUFF ROCKS.

I have won the past season at the following shows: Fitchburg, Mass., Stamford, Conn., South Framingham, Mass., Manchester, N. H., New Bedford, Mass. The above Barred Cockerels were all sired by 3d cockerel, 1903, Madison Square Garden, New York winner, 63 cockerels in this class. Reliable Poultry Journal February, 1903, liked this cockerel above all others in the show. I have a few cockerels sired by above cockerel for sale from $4.00 upwards. Standard weight of very even color, barred well all over. If you want to improve your blood these cockerels are what you want. Money returned if birds don't suit you. I have had my pens mated up by one of the leading Poultry Judges in America—4 pens headed by high scoring cockerels. I have also one pen of Buff Rocks. For the cockerel in this pen and two pullets I gave Mr. Higgins, of Orange, Mass., $75. I have not many sittings to dispose of therefore have your orders booked early. My eggs will be from same pens as I breed from myself. Choicest Eggs $2.00 a sitting.

Chicken Anatomy

[By a Leading French Scientist.]

The head of the fowl is composed of two parts—a cranium and a face; the cranium, relatively voluminous, is composed of several bones, the sutures of which in chickens are very visible, and disappear completely in adults.

The bones of the face comprise the two superior maxillae, the vomer, the square bone, the incisive bone, and the inferior maxillae. All these bones are small, but very elongated. The orbits are very large, whereas the bony wall which separates them is, on the contrary, very thin.

The beak is divided into a superior and inferior mandible; the jaw, or superior mandible, has, owing to a peculiar union with the cranium, a mobility which is not seen in mammalia. The two nostrils, placed in the middle of the superior mandible of the beak are narrow, and their projection of no account. The nasal cavities are not deep, and are equally separated by a septum. They open in the interior of the mouth by a simple slit, long, narrow and longitudinal, and furnished with small indentations. This slit opens when the bird's head is towards the ground or in its natural position, and it shuts when raised. It is on account of this anatomical dsiposition that fowls when they drink are obliged to raise their heads. The neck is composed of vertebrae of great flexibility. The trunk, on the contrary, is little movable; the dorsal parts, lumbar and sacral, of the spinal column, form an axis nearly inflexible, on which is articulated a basin entirely immovable, and a thoracic cage formed by ribs, of which the vertebral portion and the sternal portion are equally bony, and articulate themselves toward the middle part of the flank.

The sternum or breast bone is a large body shield, capable of giving a large insertion to the motive power of the wing; that surface is, moreover, enlarged by a projecting blade, which has received the name of brechet, and is prominent on the whole of the medium line of the sternum. This brechet is more or less developed, according to the power of flight of the bird. Birds that have short wings have no brechet at all, whereas in birds of prey it is very developed, and also hooked. With certain species of birds it is even hollow and replaced by an air-bag.

The anterior member is conformed in the wing, and for that purpose the shoulder is strengthened by a double caviculated apparatus, the merry-thought and sidesman, which rest on the sternum, or breast bone. The dimensions of the merry-thought vary in birds according to the degree of development of the wings, and it is missing in birds with short wings.

The humerus or bone of the arm, the radius and ulna, or forearm, offer nothing remarkable, but the end of the wing, or the hand, is formed like a stump, in which can be distinguished a thumb and a finger, more or less rudimental with two-joints. This mechanism, moved by powerful muscles, produces the basis of an instrument of locomotion really formed by the feathers. On their posterior border, the hand, forearm and arm bear the feathers of the wing, the force and dimensions of which are diminished as they get nearer the body.

The posterior, or abdominal member, is conformed for perching or walking. It is composed of a femur, or thigh bone; of a tibia, or leg bone; then, instead of the tarsus or metatarsus, comes a single bone, called bone of the tarsus, which represents these two parts, and gives internally attachment to the toes. These are four in number, three before and one behind, and some breeds have five. The knee is called the patella and the heel calcaneum, or os calcis—heel-bone. The bone of the tarsus or canon represents the foot of the hen, but she does not set it on the ground, walking on the toes, which are extended so as to give her a better basis of support.

There exists in the hen three pockets, or stomachic dilations. The first pocket is very visible to the eye when full of food, and is called the crop. A little further on in the breast is the aesophagus, which contracts and expands so as to form a second pocket, with thick and glandular walls, and which is called ventricule succenturie. Finally, next to the above is found a third cavity, very muscular and strong, known by the name of the gizzard.

The crop is the receptacle of grain swallowed by the fowl. It is in this first pocket that digestion takes place. The aesophlagus takes root from the back of the beak, runs along the neck, behind the trachea, and ends in the abdomen or belly, a little to the left. The work of the gizzard is to triturate the food which the hen can not masticate. Small stones swallowed by the hen are found in the gizzard, which some naturalists say facilitate that operation. They state that the lining of the gizzard is formed of an extremely strong muscle, which contracts to nearly touching, so as to grind the grain between the stones. This the author doubts, very pertinently, saying that it is but an hypothesis which it would be impossible to prove.

Upon the process through which the food passes, the author wisely quotes from a distinguished French veterinary surgeon, M. Mariot-Didieux, as follows, supporting his opinion:

"After a further strangulation and a short passage, the food is sent into the third pocket or gizzard. This last stomach is formed by a thick and very strong muscular membrane; the external fibres are of a sinewy nature, and of a nacreous (pearl) color; the internal membrane which lines the gizzard is very thin, fibrous and hard; it secretes a yellow coloring matter, which appears to have the property to dissolve stones, principally carbonate of lime. Silicate of potash (flint) requires a longer process. Liquids taken as drink appear to be absorbed by the first and second stomachs; they are never found in the gizzard unless in case of disease. It is worthy of remark that a hen eats, when in health, about three grammes (48 pennyweight, Troy), of calcareous or silicious sand a day.

Most naturalists and writers on poultry have been unanimous in attributing this phenomenon to the necessity that all gallinaceous birds have to eat gravel and stones to facilitate their digestion; the stones, according to these writers, fulfill the office of masticating organs or triturators of food. Without absolutely denying this opinion, so generally admitted, we think the usefulness of the stones, considered as triturators, is but secondary, and that their principal use is to furnish, by their dissolution in the gastric bag of the third stomach or gizzard, the salts of lime, of albumen and of silex. This opinion is the result of experiments we have made on this subject. In depriving for four months some fowls of all sorts of stones or sand, we remark that the shells of the eggs were much thinner, and that the albuminous white of the egg was much more liquor than in the egg of fowls which had their liberty. The yolk showed no difference. Are we not to conclude from this fact that the hen seeks for stones and sand, especially those of carbonate of lime, by natural instinct, so as to procure for her economy the salts indispensable to her existence, and for her eggs the elements necessary to the formation of the shell?

The ventricule succenturie secretes the gastric juice and represents, according to that view, the real stomach. The intestine which completes the digestive canal of the hen joins on to a cloaca, that is to say, a pocket into which also open the ureters bringing the urine, and the canal which forms the passage of the egg to be laid. The urine mixes with the excremental matter which proceeds from the intestine, and these are ejected all together. The urine of birds is always concrete; it is composed of uric acid and sundry urates; in the droppings it forms the white matter that detaches itself from the dark portion, which is the real excremental part. The salivary glands are small in fowls, and produce a liquid thick and slimy, but the quantity is very small.

The liver is very large, and divided into two lobes of equal size. The gall bladder is large and contains a thick bile, very bitter, which gives the flesh a very disagreeable taste, if the fowl is not drawn soon after it is killed. As to the surroundings of the digestive apparatus, it is sufficient to say that the pancreas pours the pancreatic juice, like the liver, into the intestines by two small tubes in the center of the duodenum, far from the pylorus, which facilitates the intestinal digestion.

The spleen is very small, of cylindrical shape, and placed behind the liver. Its functions seem to be to keep in reserve and prepare the blood used as one of the secretions necessary to digestion.

The circulatory apparatus offers no important difference from that of mammals. It exists, as in the case of the latter, by means of a heart with four cavities, and the distribution of arteries is the same. Their blood is, however, a little warmer, and continues elliptical globules of small dimensions.

Respiration takes place by lungs, which are found in the posterior and superior part of the breast, adhered to the ribs, and maintained below by a resisting membrane moved by muscular power to work the inhaling and breathing out process. The lungs are pierced with holes, so as to permit the air to circulate in all part of the body, even in the cavities of the bones. The air is brought into these organs by a very long aerial tube, of which the windpipe and bronchia possess complete cartilaginous rings. But the most singular disposition of the respitory apparatus of the fowl is the existence of large cells of air in the breast and lower part of the abdomen, which goes to show that the hen requires and absorbs in her interior a quantity of air much larger in proportion than with mammalia.

With all birds the aerial reservoirs are nine in number, viz., the thoracic bag, placed in the anterior part of the thorax; the two cervical reservoirs, situated at the base of the neck; the two anterior diphragmatic reservoirs, placed between the two diaphragms; and the posterior diaphragmatic reservoirs, also placed between the two diaphragms, behind the preceding ones; and finally the two abdominal reservoirs placed against the superior wall of the abdomen. Of these nine reservoirs, the first is single or symmetrical, the others are double, and disposed equally on each side of the median plane. No doubt these numerous vesicles, filled with hot air at 104 degrees Fahr., lighten the body of the hen when she flies, but the writer does not at all affirm that this is the only use, as the domestic fowl never flies to any height in the air.

The skin of the fowl is covered with feathers. Each feather is composed of a stem, the base of which is hollow, and inserted in the bulb; and of barbs which are furnished with down, hardly visible to the naked eye. The integumental appendages are well adapted to retain bodily heat. The feathers completely covering the skin of the hen, it cannot be said that she is sensitive to a delicate touch; and the tongue is the only organ subject to the exercise of any sense of feeling.

The nostrils are open at the base of the beak, but whether the sense of smelling is developed in the fowl or not, we know absolutely nothing.

If we were to judge by the rigidity of the tongue, by the scarcity and viscious consistency of the saliva, we should say that the sense of taste was very little developed in the fowl.. However, it rejects with astonishing sagacity the less desirable grains both before and after being taken into the beak.

The sight in poultry is incontestably very piercing. They spy at a great height the bird of prey which soars above, and give out immediately a cry of alarm, which is understood by ducks, pigeons, and all other denizens of the poultry yard. The globe of the eye is protected not only by two eyelids of vertical motion, as it is seen in some mammalia, but also by a third, called "blinking membrane," which has its existence from the internal angle of the eye, and which can be drawn from inside to outside over the eye. The cornea is strongly convex, the crystaline is flat, and the vitreous body is small.

The ear of the hen is deprived of the concha, or larger cavity of the external ear. The labyrinth has only a rudimentary cochlea; the chain of ossicles is replaced in the middle ear by a single ossible.

Finally, the external ear is a single tube, very short, but notwithstanding these imperfections, the hearing of fowls is both acute and distinct.—V. La Perre de Roo.

WALLKILL VALLEY AND HUDSON RIVER POULTRY ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting of the Walkill Valley and Hudson River Poultry Ass'n was held at Hotel St. George, Walden, on Saturday, March 4, 1904. The membership was well represented, members being present from Milton, Marlborough, Fishkill, Matteawan, White Plains, Warwick and Walden.

Since the last show, Dec. 2, 1903, there has been added to the roster 32 new members, making a total of 71. At the conclusion of the last show of the association there was a deficit of $69. Since that time up until the present all debts of the association have been paid, leaving a balance of $29 in the treasury.

The meeting was called to order by First Vice-President Edgar Briggs. Regular routine of business was followed out, including the reading of reports, election of officers, directors, etc. The officers elected for the ensuing year were as follows: President, C. G. Taylor, Fishkill Landing; first vice-pres., Edgar Briggs, White Plains; second vice-pres., A. J. Kelso, Walden; secretary and treasurer, H. W. Millspaugh, Walden; assistant secretary, C. E. Hatch, Matteawan; superintendent poultry, W. Q. Minturn, Warwick; asst. superintendent, A. C. Chase, Rifton; C. A. Dawson, Walden; Fred Woodruff, Florida; Edward Briggs, White Plains. The directors are Geo. Suiter, D. H. Cosman, Edgar Briggs, J. R. Cooper, Asa J. Brown, Fred Woodruff, N. D. Ford, Chas. Kniffin, Abram Scudder, E. M. Budlong, Chas. Cobb, P. H. Vosburgh, John Scofield, W. F. Weston, L. G. Hawks, Walter Scott, John Fetter, C. W. Peak, Chas. Conklin, Arthur Westerman, D. C. Ketterer,

C. Hoppenstedt, F. W. Corey, Elting Rosencrans.

A drawing for an incubator was held at the same time, the lucky winner being F. M. Finley of Matteawan. From the sale of tickets, new members and dues sufficient money was raised to settle all claims and leave a balance on hand.

H. W. Millspaugh was appointed a committee to complete further arrangements for the show to be held in Didsbury's Opera House, Dec. 6-10 next, with power to add to the same. Everything now points to this being one of the most satisfactory shows ever held in the history of the association.

This association is a Walden product, originally formed in that village. During a course of years it has drifted away from its original confines, but has once again been brought home and the members hope for a liberal patronage from our residents in way of encouragement. The object of these shows is to awaken an interest in the poultry world, and at the same time they act as an education along the same lines.

SOMETHING YOU SHOULD DO AND SOMETHING YOU SHOULD NOT.

We are again given a glimpse of Mother Earth after one of the hardest winters most of us can recollect, and perhaps some of us will be referring back to the hard winter of 1903-04 in the years to come.

Well, we are still on earth and the mating, hatching and rearing of poultry for next season's shows will soon be in full swing. Hens have again woke up and fanciers and poultry breeders have begun to send and receive orders for eggs for hatching. It is going to be an unusual busy year, as but few in this section have, or have wished to have, any chickens hatched, and undoubtedly such is the case in most sections. Of course there is any amount of time in which we can fill orders and at the same time get out our full complement of chicks, providing we are fully prepared, still it behooves us to be up and doing.

It is the work of the enterprising fancier to make as fully as possible his preparations during the winter for next season's chicks, so that he may give every attention to hatching and rearing the same. His quarters are cleaned, repaired and new ones built if he intends to further increase his stock. Coop for hens with chicks are attended to, and everything possible done that can be done before he commences to think of setting eggs. This is where the successful poultry raiser has the advantage of those who continually put off till the last moment and then knock together a few odds and ends of boards when the chickens have arrived, and whose coop let in a delightful (?) amount of pure air, also the pleasant (?) showers, which result in the chicks taking a trip to the happy hunting ground. These last mentioned chaps are the ones who will have a hard luck story to tell and who raise the oft-repeated cry that poultry keeping does not pay.

That is does pay is beyond question for those who will use judgment and who are willing to energetically work as they must at any vocation in order to reap successfully. These are also in the class with those who have a few good females and send off to a prominent breeder for a good male. After getting the male they will mate up a yard of eight of ten females, some of them only fairly good, thinking as he is a good, well-bred male and considered half the yard he will offset the most serious imperfections of the females. This is one of the most serious stumbling blocks on the pathway to successful fancy poultry breeding that a person can overlook. Supposing now you have two to four very fine females and four to six of fair quality. By mating the first to your male you will have a fine chance to further improve your stock, while from the latter but little, if any; while as a result of having your birds mated good, bad and indifferently you will have a fine chance to breed nothing but culls, as by the time you are ready to set eggs your best birds may not be laying and you will not know it, and so very few eggs will be set from these hens; so your money for a good male is practically thrown away, as well as a season's work.

If you wish to produce the best cull very closely and if it brings you down to but a pair or trio of fine ones you will be better pleased at the end of the season, for the quality of your stock will more than pay you for loss in numbers.

SHALL AMERICA HAVE A LAYING COMPETITION.

The Prairie State Incubator Company hand us the following article recently received by them from the editor of an Australian paper, with a request that they present it to some of the American poultry papers.

We have marveled that with Australia as an object lesson, American poultrydom has not been convulsed from end to end with a desire to hold a laying competition upon lines similar to that now being conducted at our Hawkesbury Government Agricultural College, at which some of your American breeders—one in particular—have made quite a name for themselves.

With your numerous state experiment stations you have splendid facilities for carrying out such a contest; and that the subject has not been mooted, is doubtless due to inferior knowledge of the great advantages which would accrue.

We know some of the American poultry papers have scoffed at the idea—have even commented pityingly upon our continued advocacy of such contests; but we would answer here, as we answered them, that to realize its full benefit they must be right here—on the spot.

To realize the available benefits one must remember that the small poultry keeper is such because he wants eggs for the table. There are fanciers who don't care how few eggs their hens lay so long as they will win at the shows; but these are greatly in the minority, the great bulk, as already stated, being after eggs, and plenty of them.

Among the things the contests have taught this class are:—

(1) That thoroughbreds are the best for egg production, because in keeping a certain strain of thoroughbreds, no matter what breed, they have more uniformity than they can ever get in a flock of crosses, grades, or mongrels—uniformity in laying as well as in appearance.

(2) That if the breeders who have given the subject attention can build up such layers as this competition has brought to light, then they by persistent effort can do likewise.

(3) That when a strain is kept for a few years with the laying object in view, there is no doubt whatever the eggs are sold for table purposes. The handsome profit cleared on the leading pens is, in fact, a complete answer to that much vexed question, will poultry pay?

Apart from these facts, there is the unusual interest in poultry that the widespread publication of the laying competition results brings about; and everybody knows the greater the interest the better for all concerned, for it has long ago been proved that there will not be overproduction in the poultry line in our time.

We feel strongly on this matter. Not that we have any axe to grind, for we will go out of our way to help on the project if it takes tangible form. We are willing to supply full details of the conditions governing our contest here; and, as we would like to see Australian hens represented should the competition take place, we shall be glad to act at this end in any way the promoters see fit—should our hope be acceded to. In fact, we will do anything to help on the consummation of our desire in this respect.

It seems so unlike America to have to be dragged into the question when it should be taking the initiative, not following Australia's lead. Not but that it is a good lead in this instance and gives the Americans a tall talk if they wish to outdo our competitions in either size or laying records.

Perhaps we have been rather lengthy—as all enthusiasts are apt to be—but should this epistle achieve its object, you Americans may well afford to forgive the infliction its length imposes.

WHICH IS THE WHITEST BREED?

During the past season there were offered at eleven of the largest poultry shows twenty-two "Ivory Soap" specials of $10.00 each to exhibitors of the best White cockerels and pullets. As the awards were made it would appear that White Plymouth Rocks are the best white birds. The competition was confined to the winners of first in their respective classes, thus presenting the best bird of each variety and class to compete in the finish. The W. P. Rocks furnished the greatest number of whitest birds that could win first in class competition. The contests were over a wide area, sufficiently so to be representative, being at Atlantic City, Trenton, Hagerstown, Newark, New York, Hartford, Cincinnati, Rochester, Chicago, Stamford, Pittsburg.

W. P. Rocks won	12
W. Wyandottes won	5
S. C. W. Leghorns won	3
W. Cochins won	1
W. Indian Game won	1
	22

Connecticut won on 8:—W.P. Rocks, 6; W. Wyandotte, 1; S. C. W. Leghorn, 1.

New Jersey won on 5:—W. P. Rocks, 2; W. Wyandottes, 2; W. Cochin, 1.

Pennsylvania won on 3:—W. Wyandottes, 2; W. I. Game, 1.

Massachusetts won on 2:—W. P. Rocks, 2.

New York won on 2:—W. P. Rocks, 2.

Ohio won on 2:—S. C. W. Leghorns, 2.

Total 22:—W. P. Rocks, 12; W. Wyandottes, 5; S. C. W. Leghorns, 3; W. Cochin, 1; W. I. Game, 1.

It would appear that sections surpass in fitting, grooming and production of whitest best birds. Connecticut and New Jersey pronouncedly so. Connecticut, the smallest of all, leads with 8 winners; N. J. next, and not a whole lot larger, with 5 winners; Pennsylvania 3.

Connecticut win in three varieties, N. J. with three, Penn. with two, Mass., N. Y. and Ohio with one variety each.

Massachusetts wins two at Chicago on W. P. Rocks.

Connecticut wins in N. J., N. Y. and Conn.—8.

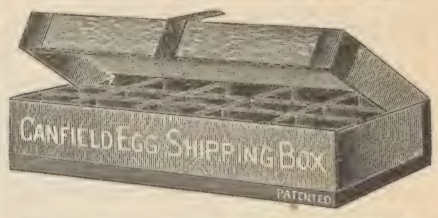
N. J. wins in N. J., Md., and Pa.—5.

Pennsylvania wins in N. Y., Md. and Pa.—3.

Massachusetts wins in Chicago, Ill.—2.

New York wins in Rochester, N. Y.—2.

Ohio wins in Cincinnati, O.—2.



Total 22.

This would indicate that Connecticut adds to the nutmeg industry the breeding of best white birds, and that Jersey without lessening the product of mosquitoes, can produce a share of best whites.

SATURDAY, APRIL 2, 1904.

FROM THE EDITOR'S PERCH.

For nearly three days the city of Johnstown was cut off from the outside world. The floods in the Mohawk valley paralyzed the traffic on the New York Central railroad, as well as on the electric roads. Mails were delayed, telegraph and telephone wires were destroyed and express matter fared likewise. To this, the delay of last week's issue of The American Fancier in reaching our subscribers and advertisers is attributable. We have held the closing of our forms one day later this week in order to accommodate our patrons whose letters have been delayed by the causes mentioned above.

There are several persons in the United States connected and interested in poultry and allied publications, trying to harpoon The American Fancier in a manner most becoming to their character. If they will kindly remember that The American Fancier is a firm consisting of two persons, one J. H. Drevenstedt and one L. Drevenstedt, and have the decency to switch their attacks to the former, we will guarantee they will have a game of lovely billiards before them. The game, however, will not be played with printers' ink.

The malicious and libellous attack in Poultry Life of America by one Alvis, against The American Fancier, its manager and editor, is of such a nature that a few plain facts regarding the agreement between said Alvis and the owners of this paper are in order. CORNMAN'S COMMENTS.

Editor American Fancier:

This week's issue of Poultry Life of America has just reached me. I regret exceedingly to note in the editorial column an editorial clipped from the Fanciers' Monthly, which criticizes rather severely the old American Fancier. Possibly the paper on which it was printed cost a few cents per pound less than that used by some contemporaries, and possibly in comparison with some of the bulky monthlies it was weakly in appearance, but I want to say that its columns were not filled with articles written by would-be poultry fanciers who breed a few birds for six months and then pose as poultry experts, and because they have a ready mind and a fluent pen write a lot of riff raff that disgusts the average poultryman and sets the amateur and beginner crazy, until by experience he is able to select wheat from chaff. I want to say that for me the American Fancier as a poultry news sheet and as an advertising medium is the best paper published in America to-day in the interest of Poultry. From one adv. in your columns that cost me $8.00 I sold $1,200.00 worth of stock, and I have never placed an adv. with you that the result has not been ten fold over and above that placed in other poultry papers. I want results. It gives me the greatest of pleasure to extend the glad hand to Bro. Drevenstedt and assure him of my hearty support.

Fraternally,

CHAS. T. CORNMAN.

PUBLISHERS' STATEMENT.

On January 9, 1904, a contract was entered into between J. W. Alvis and J. H. Drevenstedt for the purchase, by Mr. Alvis, of the "American Fancier" and its good will and appurtenances. The contract called for a certain sum of money and a certain amount of stock in a company that Mr. Alvis was organizing. Transfer of papers and payment for same were to be made on or before February 1, 1904.

After repeated assertion from Mr. Alvis that he was ready to fulfill his agreement, J. H. Drevenstedt received the stock in this company, which already had his paper, subscription lists, advertisers' lists, contracts and journal containing memorandum of advertising from patrons who stay with the paper (without a contract) year in and year out—but no money.

The publishers thereupon went to Indianapolis, and finding that Mr. Alvis could not satisfactorily carry out his contract, entered into the following agreement with him and the American Fancier Co.:

This Article of Agreement between John H. Drevenstedt, party of the first part, and J. W. Alvis and the American Fancier Co., parties of the second part, WITNESSETH:

That, Whereas, heretofore on Jan. 9th, 1904, said Drevenstedt and said J. W. Alvis entered into a contract for the purchase by said Alvis of a publication known as the "American Fancier" and its good will and appurtenances, which purchase was to be consummated on February 1st, 1904; and

Whereas, the said Drevenstedt has delivered to said Alvis certain articles, to wit: One lot of electros for advertisements, one mailing machine, subscription list, advertisers' list, free list journal, one lot of contracts and some memoranda concerning such contracts and the electro of the title page, in expectation of the consummation of such contract; but it was expressly agreed that no title to any of said articles nor such publication should vest in said Alvis until the said contract should be fully carried out; and

Whereas, said Alvis has been unable to carry out said contract and also differences have arisen between said parties as to the precise terms on which the same ought to be executed;

Now, therefore, it is mutually agreed that said contract shall be abandoned and rescinded upon the following terms, viz: Said Alvis and said American Fancier Co. shall return to said Drevenstedt everything which they or either of them have received from said Drevenstedt, being the articles above mentioned, and shall each agree that they will not make any use whatever of the mailing list, subscription list or advertisers' list of said American Fancier nor retain any copies thereof. Said Alvis and said American Fancier Co. also each agrees that they will not use as a title to any publication the name of the American Fancier nor any name similar thereto, but will select for any publication they may carry on a name clearly distinct therefrom. That they will furnish to said Drevenstedt an accurate and correct statement itemized of all sums collected on account of any subscriptions and advertisements which, under the terms of this agreement go to said Drevenstedt.

That said Drevenstedt shall and does now return to said Alvis fifty dollars advanced him for expenses, and he releases said Alvis and said American Fancier Co. from any liability for services.

Said Drevenstedt shall take all sums unpaid for advertisements and subscriptions (or renewals thereof which have already been made) on the lists which he delivered to said Alvis, and also for all the advertisements obtained by said Geo. W. Webb and those received by him after February 1st and forwarded to Alvis or the American Fancier Company.

The said Drevenstedt shall pay the unpaid expenses of George W. Webb while working for said paper during the month of February.

Said Alvis and said American Fancier Co. shall take and have all new subscriptions obtained since February 1st, 1904, and all contracts for new advertisements from advertisers not on said list turned over by said Drevenstedt or not obtained by said Webb or not forwarded by said Drevenstedt, and may use the same in any new paper they may publish as herein provided. The parties shall join in an order to the post authorities directing that all mail to the American Fancier or the American Fancier Co. at Indianapolis shall be delivered to Clifford & Moffott and shall be by them and Gavin & Davis opened and sorted, and that relating to the business which under this agreement goes to Alvis and the American Fancier Co. shall be delivered to them, and the remainder forwarded to said Drevenstedt. The said parties shall join in publishing in each of their papers a statement that circumstances had arisen to prevent the consummation of the arrangements for the transfer of the American Fancier to Alvis and the American Fancier Co., and that the American Fancier had therefore been again taken up by said Drevenstedt, and said parties shall not publish in their respective papers any articles reflecting on the others. The said Alvis and the said American Fancier Co. shall keep all moneys heretofore collected by them on account of said paper and shall pay all liabilities incurred therefor. The certificate of stock in said American Fancier Co. mailed said Drevenstedt has not been accepted by him and is returned for cancellation.

February 27th, 1904.

J. W. ALVIS,
AMERICAN FANCIER CO.,
By J. W. Alvis, Pres.
J. H. DREVENSTEDT.

After signing above agreement it was violated in the following way: Our advertisements were used to fill up their paper and some of our patrons were informed that the name had only been changed—nothing more.

A complete list of cash receipts has not been turned over. In addition to money received for advertising, which is not on the list, there is no record whatever of subscriptions sent to us by agencies and other papers, for which stamps were sent, and in one instance a check was endorsed and forwarded.

As regards the publishing in the respective papers of any articles reflecting on the others, the March 26 issue of Poultry Life of America exceeds anything that has ever been done by any other poultry editor.

Regarding the statement of subscription and advertising accounts, the contract regarding purchase was dictated by J. W. Alvis and the signatures witnessed by H. V. Crawford, secretary of the New York Poultry and Pigeon Association. The American Fancier has only once in its existence claimed a circulation of 10,000. This was while it was published at Indianapolis and appeared in February issue of Agricultural Advertising. The claim that it has made was for quality of circulation, and J. W. Alvis acknowledge that is has a specially select clientage.

As the American Fancier was at all times the property of its present publishers, the discontinuance of the paper to advertisers and subscribers was entirely unjustifiable. When even regular subscribers were deprived of their paper, such as J. F. Tallinger whose subscription expired March 5, and Mr. J. R. Piper, who held our receipt for subscription up to No. 550, March 19, we did not feel that our property had been well handled.

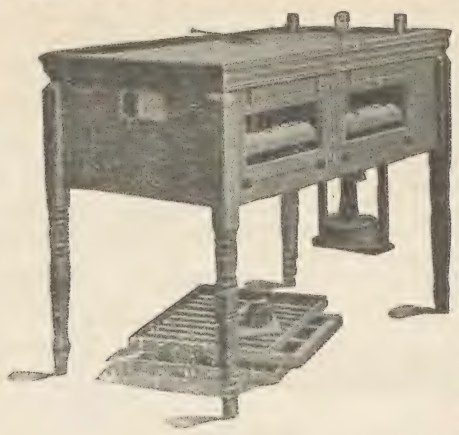
We requested the postmaster to give us the weights of papers mailed during February. These have not been forthcoming. Why not, if correct?

Regarding the subscriptions, there have been just 64 names entered on our subscription book and as we are entitled to those forwarded by us or sent in by our agents, the cash receipts must determine to whom they belong. Where are they? We find a larger number on the free list and advertising list. The former includes subscriptions offered as special premiums by the American Fancier. A list of these names was sent to our attorneys more than two weeks ago and contains some names which we now have found out belonged to us. This list can be called for. As regards our advertisers who are staying with Poultry Life of America on a contract basis, we think it strange that so many of them use absolutely the same ads. they were using in the American Fancier and that a few are still saying "See American Fancier for awards.

L. DREVENSTEDT.

WHY DOES A HEN CACKLE?

The reason commonly advanced is that she wants to advertise her achievements to the world. The Feather says that the cackle is a relic of long bygone days when fowls were not domesticated and ran about wild. When the hen wished to lay she retired from the rest of the fowl community and performed the task. By the time she was ready to join the commonwealth the other members had wandered some distance and she did not know where they were. She waited till she had gone some distance from the egg in order not to endanger it, and then she cackled, after also having taken a good look around to assure herself that no enemies were near. The rooster, hearing the cackle, answered it by a crow, and thus informed the hen of the whereabouts of the tribe. This sort of thing may be seen now among the ancestors of our domestic fowl in the Malay countries and in India. Some poultry fanciers says that even now there are many cases in which a bird gets clear of the henhouse and well out into the field before lifting up her voice. There is another point in support of the Feather's argument. When a broody hen, which is about to be set or has been lately set, is alarmed or discovers that she is in new surroundings, she frequently completely stops her clucking for a few minutes and cackles exactly like a hen which has just laid an egg.—Nor'-West Farmer.



[There is a chicken language that ordinary men do not understand. Close study would prove the hen that cackles because she is alarmed does not use the same chicken talk she does when she lays an egg. Other hens in hearing will join in the alarm call, but never in the cackle of the egg-layer. Doubtless some domestic hens get a good ways from the nest before they cackle because they are ashamed of the size of the egg they have laid when eggs are 42 cents a dozen.]—G. O. Brown in Baltimore Sun.

PRACTICAL POINTERS

By Geo. E. Howell.

Mr. Howell, associate editor of The American Fancier, will furnish weekly reports on the egg and poultry market, and answer all questions submitted to him relating to commercial and practical poultry keeping. When replies are requested to be sent by letter, stamps must be enclosed and letters addressed to George E. Howell, 70 Christopher St., New York City.

Eggs.—This has been a peculiar week in the egg market. Starting out with daily receipts as high as 34,000 cases, it dropped off until Saturday's receipts was little better than 13,000 cases. When the market price had fallen to 16½ cents, the storage operators bid for everything under 17 cents per dozen. This, with the great drop in receipts, had the tendency to make the market buoyant, and prices rose steadily, greatly to the advantage of the shipper, fancy state and other nearby consignments commanding 21 cents, western and Kentucky 18 cents, and southern from 16½ to 17½ per dozen. Duck eggs remain stationary at 35c. per dozen. Goose eggs as high as 85c. per dozen.

Poultry.—Thirty-five cars of live poultry, and 12,000 packages of dressed stock reached this market since my last report, chickens selling at 12½c. live weight, and from 17 to 17c. a lb. dressed.

Fowls, 14c., live or dressed. Broilers dressing under 3 lbs. to the pair, fancy Philadelphia, from 30 to 35c. per lb.; over 3 and under 4 lbs. to the pair, 25c.

The New York Farmer publishes the winners of the completed winter egg laying contest in Australia. As usual, the stars and stripes came in first, with a pen of Brown Leghorns, averaging 118½ eggs per hen, and fifth with a pen of White Wyandottes averaging 105. The average for the ten American pens was 107 eggs per hen, seventy pens from the various countries competing. The native Australian hen did only 78 eggs each.

Judging by the amount of eggs floating around this market, an egg laying contest for the last six months in this country would have resulted in an average of seven eggs per hen, with the hundred left off.

Six pens of American hens left for Australia on November 19 last, and four more in January, to compete in the coming test that begins in April. All the hens in the test are under the direct management of Mr. D.S. Thompson at the Hawkesburg Agricultural College, who is the government poultry expert in Australia. The pen of fowls that won first in the test was sent over by Mrs. Hansel; those winning fifth by Mr. Hays.

The following are the birds that sailed in November and January, with the names and addresses of the owners: Rose Comb White Leghorns, J. Munroe Anderson, Muncie, Ind.; White Wyandottes, William H. Bates, Rockville Center, L. I.; Single Comb White Leghorns, Henry Van Dreser, Cobleskill, N. Y.; Rhode Island Reds, Dr. J. Martin, Wichita, Kans.; White Plymouth Rocks, D. T. Roots, Connersville, Ind.; Silver-Penciled Wyandottes, E. G. Wyckoff, Ithaca, N. Y.

I saw it stated in a contemporary that the unfertile eggs from an incubator, when boiled, make a fine feed for young pheasants; from the frequency and amount of such trash that gets to market, the incubator operators must be under the impression they are placing a great table delicacy before the egg-eating public.

There are some certain fanciers I have in mind who have formed themselves into a kind of club, and send their eggs to market while yet new-laid. Having also heeded my advice as to the quality of eggs this market demands, every one hundred crates of eggs they ship me are winning them a premium of one hundred dollars over the regular market value. When they commenced to ship two years ago, their returns were under the ordinary market quotations.

There are a whole lot of things a century bill, when handed up on a silver platter will buy, even the best specimen in the best flocks. The A. P. A. president took such a bill for one of his choicest specimens on exhibition at Madison Square Garden last winter.

This brings up the question, why are such prices paid? In one instance out of ten it will probably be due to an indifferent conception of the value of money; in the other nine it will be in response to an overwhelming desire to possess something better than the buyer ever owned, something endowed with points of excellence by scientific breeding, such as his ability as a breeder never allowed him to fathom after years of endeavor. His fancier's soul craved such perfection, and brain willed, but the hand palsied and could not produce a satisfactory result; therefore, he must buy at the long price, or leave his fancier's desire ungratified.

There are mighty few flocks capable of producing the one hundred dollar kind, if every egg that came from their carcasses between now and the decree of the hatchet were incubated, and a chick reared from each one, there wouldn't be one in the lot worth five dollars, yet there are people, such as I told about last week, so covetous they are afraid some farmer neighbor might get a few of the eggs at the grocery when they themselves have never succeeded in growing anything worth more than market poultry rates.

From an investment of a few hens, ranches comprised of thousands have sprung into existence. To feed a multitude of such dimensions is a matter that claims the serious attention of the owner. What the cattlemen call "roughage" is as important as the concentrated grain ration; in fact, it is to leaven this concentrated food, the scientific men prate so everlastingly of balanced rations. Occasionally we hear of a poultryman who is making a success of his business without a green ration, but such is an exception and no safe rule to follow.

From an economic, if not from a beneficial standpoint, a cheap and coarse food must partly supply the fowls daily wants. It has often suggested itself to me, when in the vicinity of the square in Gansvoort market, on the days when the farmers are preparing their loads of vegetables for sale, what an opportunity for a ranch situated on the route these wagons take in returning to their homes, to secure for a few cents green food in abundance. The outside leaves of cabbage, etc., just such stuff as a penned up hen would appreciate with a fervor akin to a Manhattan damsel getting next to a soda fountain on a hot day.

Having suggested a local benefit, it may be well to carry the subject further. The far-seeing hen man would provide a supply of green food to draw on during the winter. The question is, how can it be done most economically? Where a thousand hens are kept it is necessary to have an area of ground attached, over and above what is occupied by the houses and yards. The city child lives and thrives between four brick walls, but there is ever a craving for a breath of fresh air. Just so with the hens—they need an occasional run to stretch their legs; therefore, it is imperative that a well planned ranch must possess land. Having the land, shall one grow or buy exclusively what can be produced at home? Well, I was raised on a farm where it was the custom to concentrate all the energy in one direction, and buy the feed for the stock, but it is my firm conviction we were working wrong. On a chicken ranch the yards must be cultivated, and why cultivate without an object in view. Small fruits for the yards, and a rotation of grain crops, followed by clover and vegetables on part of the remaining ground is the thing. Such a program involves an expenditure of muscle, and only practical with those not afraid of hard work. The invalids who are advised to try chicken raising for a pastime and short cut to health, are naturally not taken into consideration. Many such, no doubt, are benefitted by caring for a few hens, but any who embark in the chicken business for money must be physically fitted to stand the strain.

TABASCO SAUCE.

The reason people do not exhibit is because they don't want to, not because they are any more honest than those that exhibit.

Another reason why some do not exhibit is because they have not good birds.

Another reason is they have not sand enough.

All the faking in the world cannot make a poor bird win.

Getting a bird in good condition is not faking. Some people do not know the difference.

It is not faking to pull a black feather out of a white bird.

It is faking to allow the public to think one is a great poultry raiser by their pen or tongue, when one is not.

Some judges are bigger fakirs than the exhibitors.

Years ago an exhibitor had the best pen at the N. Y. show and he got nothing.

After he became well known and spoke to the judge about that pen,the latter said he would not do it now. That is worse than faking, eh!

St. Louis fair will not have a faked bird there.

How can it—with a Sunday school teacher at the head.

HIGH CLASS

Black Minorcas and White Wyandottes

Our breeding yards not only contain the leading winners at the late New York show, but were selected from yards that have done the bulk of the winning at Madison Square Garden for the past six years. At Rochester we won seven out of a possible ten first prizes.

Eggs for hatching orders will be booked for a very limited number of eggs from yards composed entirely of New York and Rochester winners at $10.00 per 13 straight. All other pens $3.00 per 13; $5.00 for 26.

MR. RICKER'S REPLY.

Editor American Fancier:

I wish to correct a few wrong impressions Mr. C. G. Hopla pretends to be laboring under, concerning show report games and game bantams at N. Y., written by me, and would say Messrs. Ricker and Hill have only the highest regard for Mr. Cornman, both as a gentleman and an able fancier, and we believe this sentiment is general in this fancy, and they are perfectly satisfied with the awards received by their birds as a whole.

Descriptive comment in the universal English style, is not in any sense intended to antagonize the generally excellent work of the judge. The difference of opinion noted on an occasional award ofttimes gives a good bird the benefit of an expression of the doubt, due to the owner, and to other fanciers not present. These comments are usually written near the end of the week when the birds have settled down and the fanciers have had ample time to study the classes at their leisure and under the most favorable conditions. It would require a genius to get it out of some of them the first day or two, especially with the size and quality of these classes for several years back at N. Y. These are simple facts well known to every intelligent and well posted exhibitor, and are only mentioned here for the benefit of your correspondent. This, in assuming that he is honest and believes what he states, but a careful reading of the article filled with misstatements and ill-natured personal remarks, makes it very plain that the contrary is the fact. What then is the motive? Probably attempting to "square up" or "make good" with his employer. In looking over the official catalogue N. Y. 1904, I find this so-called Columbia poultry farm, of which this gentleman publicly advertises himself as manager, made over 20 entries in the poultry classes, the most of which did not receive a mention, and of the remainder the highest award received appears to be one 1st on a duck. Ignorance of what a winning bird should be and consequent inability to breed one is the only logical conclusions to be drawn from a costly experiment of this kind. I wrote a show report at the request of the Fancier, but I am not the only one to blame. I have been too long interested in the study and breeding of chickens—some 22 years, to feel inclined to "go way back and sit down," because some obscure individual says he is hot. On your record, Mr. Hopla, you should have remained back, without being told. Free discussion is a fundamental American policy, and whether applied to questions of government or to a difference of opinion on the merits of a game bantam, the benefits are the same, the result is more common ground, a better understanding and fellowship all around. There are some, for obvious reasons, who at times term this kicking. Not sizing up to the merits of the discussion, they kick up the dust, or, as an Englishman would say, "draw a red herring across the trail." I admire a kicker, even one of the latter sort, and wishing to make it as easy as possible for Mr. Hopla, will pass over his misstatements as to our winning only one 1st in open classes, and that I made a premature exit from Madison Square Garden for the purpose of escaping a conflict with his superior knowledge, on account of my villainous duplicity in criticising a few of Mr. Cornman's awards, after being awarded 1st prize on a wry tailed hen. Now on this latter point I feel that there is ground for an honest mistake or difference of opinion, and wish to treat the same in a perfectly fair manner, and will state that this hen has not, and never has had a permanently wry tail. A day or two after penning I was very much surprised to notice this hen at times, carry her tail a little to one

A Hatching ..Wonder..

The new "CYCLE" Hatcher. The perfected result of the latest discoveries in artificial incubation. A wonder of the 20th century. An entirely original and novel method of hatching and brooding chicks. It requires only the self-supplied moisture of the egg itself. No egg tray doors to open. Regulation automatic and scientifically exact. Holds from 50 to 10,000 and can be set when started with 50 or more eggs per day until its capacity is complete, making unnecessary to fill entire machine at starting. Eggs cooled without removal from machine. Will hatch hens, ducks, geese, or turkey eggs equally well and at the same time. Made entirely of metal and asbestos; fire-proof and will not warp, swell, shrink or crack.

A hen never hatches better or stronger chickens than when setting on the ground, in which event the underside of the eggs are cooler than the upper surface, and the "Cycle Hatcher" is the only machine built following closely the natural laws of incubation covering this very essential point, as well as many others.

When the fresh air enters the machine near the center tube it carries with it the moisture it naturally contains. On becoming heated it rapidly expands as it is carried along the heated surface, and because the upper metal of the egg chamber is still warmer than the incoming air, the moisture is carried along until it reaches a cooler surface, where it condenses, leaving the dry air to rise again to be forced out in waves by the rapidly expanding air above.

It would be impossible to get the same results from a wooden machine or one made from any other absorbing material. In the Cycle the only thing that can absorb moisture is the asbestos felt directly under the eggs, where it should be, which never becomes absolutely dry during the process of incubation.

50 egg size only $5.00. Full particulars promptly furnished on application.

side. On investigating carefully I discovered that she was at war with the hen in the adjoining pen. I placed cardoard between them, which only partially remedied the matter, when her attention was fully occupied by a sharp use of the stick, and again when moved a few pens further away by herself, which I did in the presence of two or three others, there was no further trouble in this respect. Of course the place to settle such matters is on the spot, and I was right there from Monday morning until Saturday and among the Games and Game Bantams almost every minute, Mr. Hopla's statement to the contrary notwithstanding.

I will back the judge and prove my own good faith by the following proposition. (Now the Rev. Mr. Hill does not bet, but on receipt of notice from the Editor of Fancier, that Mr. H. or his employer has deposited $25 with him, the writer will at once do the same with a like amount, and will then forward this hen to any competent judge named by the editor. If it is decided that the hen should have been disqualified on account of wry tail, the $50 will be forwarded to you or your manager, otherwise the amount shall be paid to me. In case I lose, also I will pay the $5 won on this hen to the owner of the next best hen, as I care nothing for an award to which I am not fairly entitled. Trusting that my explanations and offer may meet your expectations, and hoping that the Columbia Poultry farm under your management may, in time, rank with the best in the land, I remain, Yours truly,

What a Visit to Chas. A. Cyphers' Factory Will Reveal.

A visit to the new incubator factory of Mr. Chas. A. Cyphers will astonish anyone by the remarkable development achieved by him, considering the brief period he has been established in his new enterprise. It is but a few months since eh announced, through the poultry press, that he had resigned as President of the Cyphers Incubator Co., and had started a new concern under his now name, for the manufacture of his newest inventions for artificial incubation. That such progress could be accomplished in so short a time is evidence that Mr. Cyphers possesses good business ability as well as exceptional inventive genius along this line.

Here can be seen a well organized force in every department, and the precision and accuracy with which each part of the machines being built, fit and go to form his New Model Incubators, is conclusive assurance that purchasers will get machines which will give universal satisfaction and results. Mr. Cyphers personally supervises his produce from start to finish, and sells the same under a guarantee that is both liberad and fair. He has confidence in his output and proves this by his guarantee.

NO. 2 MODEL INCUBATOR.

Mr. Cyphers' new catalogue gives in detail the construction, principle and illustration of his methods, and will be sent free to any one who will write for it. It shows views of the factory and gives anyone, unable to pay him a personal visit, a very good idea of his equipment and qualifications for turning out incubators and brooders which are certain to prove their exceptional merit by their high per cent. hatches and rearing quality. Every reader of this paper should send for a copy of this catalogue. Address, Chas. A. Cyphers, 39-47 Henry St., Buffalo, N. Y.

INCUBATORS and BROODERS

I am the owner of the above Trade Mark, and if it is on the incubator or brooder you purchase, it is a guarantee that you are getting the latest development of my skill and experience, and also a better machine than I have ever built before. They are not the "Cyphers" by name, but the "Model." Please do not get the two machines confused. Note what customers say about my new goods:

NEW HAVEN, CONN., Mar. 14, 1904.

Dear Sir: My Model Incubator arrived in good order, and I am more than pleased with it, especially the way it does its work. I have as good a lot of chicks as anyone wants to see, and no cripples. From January eggs I received a 95% hatch. One thing I have noticed different from other incubators I have used and seen is, that there are no dead chicks in the shells. I breed the Buff Rocks and Buff Wyandottes only, and it was a pleasure to see the little buff heads pop out.

Yours truly,

WEST BRIGHTON, S. I., N. Y., Mar. 15, '04.

Dear Sir: Since I received your "Model Colony Brooder" I have had it running in an open space, strong northwesterly gales blowing, and the thermometer registering eighteen degrees. Kept the temperature in the brooder at eighty-six degrees, and have always found it the same in the morning. One morning the brooder was covered with ice and sleet, but the temperature inside was eighty-six. I think that was a good test.

Yours sincerely,
WM. M. BACON.

PEA COMB RED CLUB SPECIALS AT WORLD'S FAIR.

The Pea Comb Red Club of America offer a handsome silver cup of artistic design to be won outright by the exhibitor winning the most points in regular classes at the World's Fair poultry exhibition. This silver cup is to be won only by an exhibitor who is a member of the club at least thirty (30) days before the World's Fair poultry exhibition opens, so that anyone who wishes may start in this season and by joining the club get an equal chance with the older breeders of this variety.

Handsome special ribbons will be given for best shaped cock, hen, ckl. and pullet; also for best colored male and best colored female. With each of above special ribbons will go a paid-up membership in the club for one year, provided they are won by parties not a member before the exhibition.

It is conceded by everyone in the least familiar with poultry that a pea comb is one of the most practical with which poultry are adorned, and when the same is set off with the deep long body of a R. I. Red, also its fine brilliant color, red eye, handsome yellow legs, it adorns what will eventually become one of the most practical varieties in the poultry world.

R. I. Reds are conceded a money maker, whether produced for exhibition or utility, and they were bred for many years for their practical qualities by some of the largest utility and egg farms in the east long before the fancier took hold to improve their color. Their practical qualities being therefore established, it is the pleasure of those who have introduced the pea comb to further increase this quality by producing as near as possible a frost proof comb, at the same time retaining and intensifying their desirable points.

If you are looking for money from the sale of eggs, the production of a fine carcass with no dark pin feathers dressed for market, or, still, wishing for a handsome, stylish fowl, you are surely missing your opportunity by not taking up with this variety, joining the club and becoming convinced that the pea comb R. I. Red fowl is but justly named the all-'round practical fowl of purely American production.

The club, although recognizing its intrinsic worth, have abstained from any attempt to boom their favorite until its characteristics had become fixed, as it will now reproduce its kind as well as any standard variety, they deem it time to place it before the poultry-loving public, knowing that its many excellent qualities will steadily gain it new friends wherever introduced.

The club is in a measure a baby in comparison to what it will become when the sterling merits of this breed are known; when they consider, its star will be pre-eminent to the north, east, west and south.

You, kind reader, are cordially invited to join with us in introducing a desirable variety, and any information you need will be cheerfully given by the secretary.

Horace Havemeyer, - Stamford, Conn.

IT'S A CINCH

to breed the BUFF WYANDOTTE winners if one has the right kind of stock, SUITABLY MATED. It's one thing to secure individuality, but to reproduce or BREED ON, it's absolutely necessary that a specimen's ancestry for A TERM OF YEARS be of the very best of it's time. "Like begets like," OR LIKE ITS ANCESTRY—more often perhaps the latter. What does prove a success from a breeder's standpoint is INDIVIDUALITY BACKED UP WITH A RICH INHERITANCE of first prize winners for many generations. So far, doubtless you agree with me. Now, where better can you find the desired NICKING qualities than from a strain that has been successfully maintained before the public since the origin of the breed?

For FIVE YEARS IN SUCCESSION we have won at New York or Boston THREE OF THE FIRST PRIZES; one year winning ALL THE FIVE FIRSTS AT NEW YORK; another year ALL FIRSTS AT BOSTON, save on pen; each year winning MORE FIRSTS THAN ALL COMPETITORS COMBINED . . . . . .

We have birds for sale that descend straight from these first prize winners. Past years matings were headed by such males as follows: 1-3-5 COCKS, 2 and 3 OPEN CLASS, and 1 and 2 PEN COCKERELS, BOSTON, 1903, also the sires of the four mentioned cockerels, Talk about male producing strains, WHERE IS ITS EQUAL? We don't charge any more for OUR KIND than those claimed to be (?) just as good. Write us for anything you want.

We shall sell eggs at $3.00 per thirteen straight. We are now preparing a circular giving our method of mating which has proven so successful. It is free to those who send for it. Egg orders booked now for future delivery, insuring shipment when wanted. (Send for Catalogue.)

BARRED AND BUFF ROCKS.

I have won the past season at the following shows: Fitchburg, Mass., Stamford, Conn., South Framingham, Mass., Manchester, N. H., New Bedford, Mass. The above Barred Cockerels were all sired by 3d cockerel, 1903, Madison Square Garden, New York winner, 63 cockerels in this class. Reliable Poultry Journal February, 1903, liked this cockerel above all others in the show. I have a few cockerels sired by above cockerel for sale from $4.00 upwards. Standard weight of very even color, barred well all over. If you want to improve your blood these cockerels are what you want. Money returned if birds don't suit you. I have had my pens mated up by one of the leading Poultry Judges in America—4 pens headed by high scoring cockerels. I have also one pen of Buff Rocks. For the cockerel in this pen and two pullets I gave Mr. Higgins, of Orange, Mass., $75. I have not many sittings to dispose of therefore have your orders booked early. My eggs will be from same pens as I breed from myself. Choicest Eggs $2.00 a sitting.

Ash and Grit for Growing Chicks.

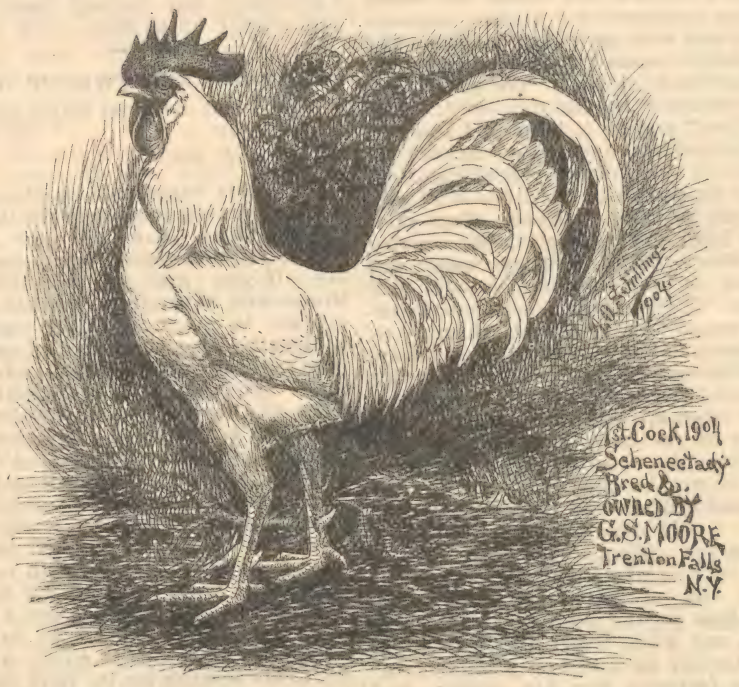
F. H. Hall and W. P. Wheeler.

RAPID BONE MAKING.

The growing chick on the ordinary farm or the village lot is left quite largely to its own efforts in obtaining food; and wisely so. Aided by a few days' instruction from its busy, scratching mother, and guided by Nature's voice, as expressed in the demands of its rapidly-growing body, the young bird selects a varied and abundant diet and becomes a vigorous fowl.

We easily see that grains make up a large part of the diet; but we too often fail to realize that grains cannot supply all the bird's needs, and pass over unnoticed many important elements of poultry diet.

Great have been the demands made by the developing bodies, diverse the materials the chicks have gathered to meet these demands, and astonishing the kinds and quantities of ingredients which must pass through the digestive and circulatory systems of the active bird organism to insure perfect development. We fall short in kinds of food, if not in amounts, when we confine the birds to contracted houses and feed them mainly on grains.



Think what the chick or duckling does during the first three months of its growth! Man, in 15, 18, or more years, may multiply his birth-weight by 20; the calf weighing from 50 to 75 pounds may in three years become the cow, bull or steer of from 900 to 1,200 pounds; but the chick in 10 weeks often shows a gain of 1,500 per cent. and ducklings may add from 50 to 100 per cent. to their weight weekly. And this growth is not of flesh, fat, or soft tissue merely; for the extensive, strong, bony framework must be formed with equal rapidity. With the largest breeds, like the Cochins or Brahmas, the body of the unfattened young fowl is largely bones, with just enough flesh to hold these together and to keep them moving in the growing fowl's incessant search for food. Something like 10 per cent. of the body of an average fowl would be made up of inorganic (mineral) bone elements or "ash;" and the percentage must be much greater in these lean, immature birds.

GRAINS DEFICIENT IN ASH.

Can not the bird secure from grains the ash elements needed to supply the demand for bone material? If 10 per cent. of the daily increase in weight is made up of ash, then the fowl must either consume foods which contain somewhere near this percentage, must store up a very large proportion of what enters the body, or must consume excessive quantities of food to secure the necessary mineral elements.

The ordinary grains will not supply this ash in any such proportion. Corn contains only 1½ per cent. of ash, wheat less than 2 per cent., wheat less than 2 per cent., wheat screenings or oats 3 per cent., middlings 3 1-3 per cent., and bran, which is richest in this element of grains or grain refuses commonly used, carries less than 6 per cent. In digestion experiments with other animals, ash is usually less completely digested than the other nutrients, so it would not be safe to assume that fowls store up so much more of the ash than of the food as a whole—although a portion of the other constituents is used in supplying the energy expended and does not add directly to the bird's weight.

Thus we must force the fowl to eat large quantities of food in order to get the amount of ash needed; or we must provide some richer source of mineral elements than grains. If the bone-making material is not abundant one of two things will happen: The bones will be large, soft and weak, resulting in lameness or deformity; or the development of the bird will be governed by the mineral elements and will thus be retarded, making growth slow and unsatisfactory. Such a check in growth can rarely be overcome; just as it is almost impossible to restore the full flow of milk in a cow that has been starved to a marked shrinkage of production.

WHITE LEGHORN COCKEREL

First at Rochester 1904. Owned and bred by G. S. Moore, Trenton Falls, N. Y.

SOURCES OF ASH.

It has been shown by previous tests that ducklings must have animal food to quite an extent to do their best, and the same was thought to be true of chicks as well, when the first series of tests was concluded. In subsequent tests it was shown that most of the advantage of the animal food, in the case of the chicks, was due to the large amount of ash elements the meat meal contained; for when bone ash was added to purely grain rations, made palatable by great variety and regular changes, the chicks did as well as upon rations with animal food. The ash element was the essential factor in the case of the chicks. Ducklings, however, need the animal protein; for they never do so well when that is lacking, even if the ash elements are liberally provided.

The mature hen requires large quantities of lime for egg-making, but can obtain it from oyster shells and similar inorganic material. Is the same thing true of growing chicks which need lime to build bone? Phosphorus also is required in bone-making and the grains do not furnish enough of it for rapid growth. Can this be obtained from minerals direct, as well as from the ground bone, bone ash or meat meal? If minerals are eaten by the chicks, does any part of them become soluble and serve as true nutrients, or do the minute particles of the minerals merely act as grit in the crop and aid mechanically in digesting the food?

STATION TESTS.

These are some of the questions which the station has sought to solve, in part, by a series of tests extending over several years and including 19 lots of Leghorn chicks. The separate lots were composed of from 24 to 76 chicks, contrasted lots being always alike, and were fed from 10 to 12 weeks, beginning with chicks from one to three weeks old.

The rations for some lots were made up without animal food and for others with animal food; and the materials were so combined that under rations of each general class certain ones should be lower than usual in ash, others higher than usual and still others of medium ash content. Then to the rations thus made up, there were added varying percentages of glass sand, of fine ground Florida rock phosphate, of ground oyster shell, of bone ash, of sand and Florida rock, of sand and oyster shell, or of bone ash and oyster shell.

In various tests, from 1-24 to 3-38 as much sand (grit) was used as of other dry matter fed, and from 1-48 to 3-28 as much of the mineral as of the other dry matter. In some rations in which these two classes were combined the added ash elements weighed ⅛ as much as the other dry matter of the rations and the average amount was about 1-10. By these combinations very careful comparisons could be made of the effect of the several substances upon the health and growth of the chicks.

RESULTS.

Sand alone, both in a ration without animal food and in one containing animal food with bone, contributed to a more efficient use of the food. The increase in weight was not much greater, but the chicks were healthier, more vigorous, and apparently better prepared than those without sand in their food, to make profitable later growth. This was true even in cases where the chicks were running upon sanded floors and so were free to pick up sand as they required it. This emphasizes the necessity of looking carefully after the supply of grit, but it does not imply that it is best to buy poultry foods in which sand has been mixed. Sand or grit can be obtained more cheaply and added to the food as required.

The ground Florida rock phosphate proved of more value as an addition to rations than did sand. When used without sand in two grain rations, better results followed, in both efficient use of food and in rate of growth, than when sand alone was added to similar rations. When used with sand in one ration containing animal food but somewhat low in ash and in another ration without animal food, the chicks grew more rapidly and required less food for equal growth than when sand only was mixed with the same foods.

Oyster shell, on the other hand, proved an undesirable component of ration for chicks. Whether the ration contained animal food or was composed of grains alone, the health of the chicks was not so good nor was the food used so efficiently when oyster shells were included as when sand alone was added to the rations; and the comparison was still less favorable between the oyster shells and the ground rock phosphate. Oyster shells mixed with bone ash gave better results than oyster shells alone; in one case this combination was more efficient than sand and in another case nearly as efficient, but there was plainly some injurious action of the oyster shells. Though it is not certain that such is the case, it is probable that the powdered shells neutralize too completely and continuously, or too rapidly, some of the digestive juices and thus interfere with the proper digestion of some of the other foods.

CONCLUSIONS.

These experiments show plainly the advantage of a plentiful supply of ash for growing fowls and, by themselves, indicate that even the tiny chicks can make profitable use of such uncommon elements of poultry diet as sand and rock phosphate. The tests must not, however, be regarded as revolutionizing poultry feeding or considered as recommendations for the use of all such materials in ordinary practice. They are, rather, of scientific interest as establishing the necessity for certain elements in the food of poultry. Those elements can be obtained easier, in better combination and in more palatable form in materials already recommended by our most successful feeders,—fine raw or cooked bone. Of these, of some animal meal, of green vegetables, clover or alfalfa, and of good, clean grit, every grower of young chicks should make careful and constant use.—Bulletin 242 of New York Agricultural Experiment Station,

A STRANGE FRIENDSHIP.

When about two months old, Darkness, a little black rabbit, and Daylight, a small white bunny, were brought from their country home to live in a large city. They were to become part of a collection of birds and animals which had been gathered by a gentleman who wished to study their various modes of life and other habits. Upon their arrival at their new home the many other pets had already filled all available cages and boxes, and they were therefore given a lodging in the basement of the house. As it was winter and the weather very cold, they soon found that the most comfortable and warmest spot in the basement was right back of the furnace, and here, resting on a large thick board, they spent most of their spare time during the frosty weather. With the coming of the warm and bright days of spring they were taken up into the brighter light and fresher air, and given quarters in an abandoned wing of the chicken coop. This proved an agreeable change to both, but alas, likewise a bad move for Daylight,for only a few nights afterwards, a neighborly dog, out for a moonlight stroll and a round of inspection, saw bunny playing in the coop and forcing an entrance he caught and killed her. In some way he overlooked Darkness, perhaps because he was black and not so easily seen as his pure white companion, perhaps it was because he didn't like "dark meat." At any rate, Darkness escaped and had to live on alone in the coop and developed into a very lonely, sad and melancholy-looking rabbit. He yearned for company and sympathy and by and by he got it, but in rather a peculiar way. One day the mistress of the household bought from a passing farmer, a young Plymouth Rock rooster, intending him for the following Sunday dinner. The most convenient place to cage him seemed to be the quarters occupied by Darkness. What a crow of joy he would have given had he been able to foresee the future, for it was this circumstance that saved his life. As soon as Darkness saw him, new light and life seemed to enter his eyes. Again he had a companion. It didn't seem to matter to him whether his new friend wore feathers or furs. At once he began making overtures for closer acquaintance, and strange to say, his feathered companion seemed equally anxious to further the friendship. The mistress of the household seeing this, said: "Let him live," and so it happened that the family had veal instead of chicken for dinner on the following Sabbath. Very happy proved to be the lives of Darkness and his rooster friend. Each tried to be kind and do good deeds, one for the other. When corn or oats was thrown in, the rooster would call loudly, "Cluck, cluck, cluck," and Darkness would hop up for his share. Of cabbages, leaves and lettuce a share would always be left by Bunny for his feathered friend. At night they would go to sleep sitting side by side in a corner of the coop, and often in the day time the rooster would scratch a hole where the sun would strike the dust and ground, and then both he and bunny would cuddle down and sun themselves. When the dogs would come sniffing about and come up close to the wire netting, the rooster would pick them on the nose and scare them away, and when Pussy would look in from the top he would crow loudly, ruffle his feathers, flap his wings and scratch to show his defiance. So the two friends, one clothed in speckled feathers, the other in black fur, lived on in peace and happiness day by day.

GEDNEY FARM.

Gedney Farm, White Plains, N. Y., is beautifully situated about a half mile walk from the end of the trolley line. Having seen the fine display fn horses and Jersey cattle made at the great Danbury fair by the farm, and the great showing made at Madison Square in White Wyandottes, we were anxious to pay a visit to the home of these thoroughbreds, and upon a warm, personal invitation from Mr. L. E. Ortiz, the general manager, we stopped over until Monday and took a run up from New York before leaving for home; and we were well repaid, for the sight that met our eyes in Wyandottes and Black Minorcas we don't very often have a chance to see. In Minorcas the females consisted of 60 hens and 40 pullets, the best that experienced breeding and money can produce. There was almost a total absence of that objectionable purple and in its place that rich green sheen like velvet, which is so hard to get. The male birds consisted of 7 cock birds, and about the same number of cockerels, the stock having been culled down to actual exhibition and breeding stock, and here is the home, without doubt, of the greatest cock bird in America for size, color and shape, weighing almost 12 lbs., with true Minorca shape and rich green color. He won first at Rochester, 1903. Was from the yards of the noted breeder, Dr. Andruss, and conceded to be the best bird ever brought out and we doubt if we will ever see his equal. Added to the already famous string is the cream of Madison Square Garden, 1904: 1st pen, 1st cock, 2nd hen, and some others equally as good, making in all as fine a flock of Minorcas as lives in America to-day. In White Wyandottes we can only add that they were on a par with the Minorcas and that is saying a great deal. Besides winning their share of the regular prizes in the Garden, they won four specials on color and shape. The cockerel in 2nd pen was simply grand, being a typical Wyandotte in every respect.

In regard to the poultry houses, Mr. Ortiz does not believe in doing anything by halves. They are the best that skilled labor and money can produce, and cover about 600 feet in length, and more will be added as they are needed. The incubator cellar is 20x20 and stocked with Chas. A. Cypher's New Model Incubators, and to secure the success of the magnificent plant, the management has secured the services of Frank Gaylor, the veteran in the art of raising chickens. He will have complete charge of the poultry plant, and this is a guarantee that Gedney Farm will be run strictly up to date. G. W. W.

RATIONS FOR TWELVE HENS.

Kindly tell me what ration to feed 12 fowls a day. M. R. M.

Hereford, Md.

[Depends somewhat on the breed. Asiatics would require more than Plymouth Rocks, and the last named would require more than Leghorns, etc. If you are keeping Plymouth Rocks and Wyandottes and they are already in good condition, start with a morning feed composed of any mixture such as has often been advised in these columns. Allow about three pints of the mixture in the dry state, mix with boiling water to a dry, crumbling consistency. The mixed food is usually made with cornmeal and wheat bran of middlings at the rate of two pints of meal to one of bran, sometimes half and half. A good feed for eggs is hominy chop, ground oats and middlings, equal quantity by measure of each. At noon scatter half a pint of wheat or fine cracked corn in some deep, dry litter under cover, and let the fowls scratch for it. Give for night feed a quart (dry measure) of grain, wheat or corn, or you can use coarse cracked corn and buckwheat. A good plan is to mix the evening food, giving two kinds of grain. Good clover hay cut fine and boiling water poured over it, then cover up with an old piece of burlap for an hour, drain water off thoroughly, then mix some wheat bran with it, and see how the fowls will enjoy it. It is a good substitute in winter for green feed at noontime. If you have cabbages, even the waste outside leaves, they can be profitably used in the poultry yard. Feeding fowls properly requires good judgment, more so in winter than at other seasons. Health of the flock depends not alone on feeding; then must have exercise. Regular poultrymen consider the scratching shed and a bountiful supply of good clean scratching litter as of about as much importance, when "results" are considered, as the food. Aim to feed so the fowls will always relish their allowance. If you must be liberal-handed it better be done at supper time. Provide a supply of grit, either crushed oyster shells or the regular crushed granite specially made for poultry. In winter poultry do not have opportunity to secure a supply of grit naturally. Many mysterious ailments, causing derangement of bowels and digestive organs, are due mainly to the lack of grit.

Fowls are like human beings with their appetites. Some are moderate eaters, some "good feeders," some are simply gluttons. Consequently it is next to impossible to name a perfect allowance of food for one day for 12 fowls of any kind. On one occasion a veteran poultryman in giving advice to a beginner, after explaining the importance of proper houses and runs, cleanliness, regularity in feeding, etc., said: "Now when you come to feed you've got to mix good common sense and brains with the rations you give to your flocks." This simply means that you must study your breed in order to know how to treat the fowls in the best manner. You will then discover their allowance should be varied in accordance with seasons; opportunities for foraging and even weather conditions will be considered. It is necessary to know a flock before one can properly say, strictly speaking, just what amount of food they daily require.]—G. O. Brown in Baltimore Sun.

THE MINOSHKY.

An article in a recent number of Poultry Life of America tells of a long-tailed race of fowls in Japan and Korea, and says that it has been claimed that these birds descended from chicken-pheasants hybrids. I have heard this claim before, but pretty good authorities say that such is not the case, and I don't believe there is any race of fowls from such an origin. These long-tailed fowls belong to the Game class and in Japan are called "Minoshkies." They have long tails, because the natives have, by years of cultivation, produced this abnormal appendage. Because the Minoshky has a long tail it is no more reason for believing that the breed descended from a pheasant cross than there is for believing that the modern Polish fowl descended from some crested breed of wild gallus. By selection and artificial means, such as tying pebbles to the coverts (the main tail feathers of the Minoshky are no longer than those of an ordinary fowl) the Japs have ingeniously produced this peculiar characteristic. It is a notable fact that these same fowls in this country grow shorter tails and without the artificial means and under different climatic conditions the Minoshky gradually becomes almost like any full-plumaged Game fowl, as those of the pit class. From a pair of "Phoenix" fowls (which are a variety of the Minoshky) having tail hangers five feet long (in the cock) I produced annually shorter tails, by degrees, until after a few years descendants from this pair grew only two or two and a half foot feathers. Darwin would say that this changing from long to short tails was "reversion"—that the type was gradually reverting back to that of the original kind, which was only a common fowl—perhaps a common Game fowl. To produce the long tails seen on the oriental specimens it is said that a warm, moist climate is necessary; then, with the proper feather forming foods, about which the Japs evidently understand, and the constant stretching of the quills while soft, these remarkable feathers are produced. The "Phoenix" variety is very pretty, the cocks being of a Gorden Ducking color, usually. The other variety, known as "Yokohahas," is of the Pied or Pili color, varying some in shade and distribution of red over white. Some cocks are marked like our Red Pile Game, and others have streaks or lacings of red on the white breast, the back more or less red.

The Minoshkies are small fowls ranging in weight with our smallest pit cocks. From a cocker's standpoint, the Minoshky is not game, i. e., will not stand the test in battle. The fighting game fowl of Japan, the "Shamo," is of an entirely different type ,these being large, coarse, heavy-boned, short-plumaged fowls, resembling in general make-up the Malay, differing chiefly from that fowl in being somewhat shorter of leg, having a pea (instead of web) comb, and having real courage in battle, which quality the Malay never had. LAKENFELDERS.

I read with interest and enjoyment the article by Mr. Percy W. Thornley reproduced from Feathered World, under the caption "Lakenvelders," spelled with a "v." I read it with interest because I myself am in love with this "Prussian colored" breed; have been in love with them ever since I was big enough to wear wooden shoes lined with straw, considered at that time the acme of perfection and comfort; and shall stay in love with them until a more "sensationally beautiful" fowl, as our mutual friend Dr. Phelps expresses, is found, that is able at the same time to hold up the strong utility points of Lakenfelders. I read Mr. Thornley's article with enjoyment—a curious kind of enjoyment—because the English standard, as he explains it, is a step back from what has been attain, is a sure loss of the value of the breed, beauty considered, and, if any experience with American breeders and the high aims, which we are always apt to set ourselves, count for anything, I don't believe for one second that we will find it proper to follow the English ruling in calling for a "saddle hackle shiny black, free from striping."

The rare beauty of Lakenfelders lies in the fact that, as Mr. Thornley rightly says, "For all other breeds the neck hackle is either as light or lighter than the body color, with the exception of Light Brahmas, but in this variety the order is reversed, and the contrast is very striking."

Is not the contrast more striking, the colors harder to keep apart and the specimen more beautiful if we demand an all white saddle? Is it not a fact that a breed with an all white body, breast and back, set off with an all black head, hackle and tail is better proportioned as to color than a breed that allows the black from tail to also cover the saddles? 'Tis very true the all black saddle is easier to breed in, but are fanciers just craving for those points that are easy of attainment? Is it not better to work years and work slowly in the perfection of a certain section, generally contrary to common breeding, than to cast all rules aside and allow the easy thinks to become the law?

The Lakenfelder Club of America, just now on the eve of forming itself, has work ahead that will count for years to come, if done along the right lines. If the members decide to follow the ridiculous English ruling in breeding for a black saddle, all the careful work of German breeders for generations past and their accomplishment of to-day—a white saddle, each feather with a narrow black stripe—will be lost, as far as this continent is concerned.

I cannot induce myself to think that the American breeder and fancier of Lakenfelders will allow himself to backstep. Advance is the watchword for this country, and let us not make an exception to this rule in Lakenfelder culture.

There are at present three types of Lakenfelders in existence. The Germans have and value most highly the White Leghorn typed specimen, with a medium large comb, white saddle in males aimed at and comb of females to fall to one side, something similar to our Leghorns, only on a somewhat smaller scale. This type, known best as the "Homestead" type, is famous at the same time as marvellous layers of good sized pure white shelled eggs. They are non-sitters.

The Dutch have a smaller type, combs very thin and small, combs in females straight and general body color white, often broken with spotted feathers, at the same time gray often appears on head and in tail of males. These are often persistent sitters and generally very shy and will fly at the least commotion in the yard.

The third is the present English type, a medium between the two mentioned, medium large in size, comb in females mostly thin and straight and fully a third will prove good sitters and mothers. This third type is easily recognized by the saddle being blacker than the rest and in fact the discarded specimen of the first type mentioned would prove admirable standbys for this line if a dark saddle be there.

Should be pleased to hear from the importers of Lakenfelders as to their ideas and as to what type they fancy as to be the best for all concerned. Dr. Phelps has the floor!

A GOOD OLD PLACE.

The American Fancier, after a more or less pleasant visit at Indianapolis, has returned to Johnstown, N. Y. Editor Drevenstedt thinks the climate of Johnstown is much better for the old bird. Its short trip was a benefit, if possible, for it returned invigorated and toned up, comes printed on a better grade of paper, its old familiar American eagle heading newly engraved, and still retains its individuality and good features. Johnstown is a pretty good old place if it is 150 years old.—American Poultry Journal, Chicago, Ill.

DE PUY WAS LONESOME.

Gee whiz, weren't we lonesome the month we were the only poultry paper published in New York state, the first time in the history of poultry journalism that we have any knowledge of when only one paper was published in this state devoted to the poultry industry. The American Fancier went out west, but oh, my, how homesick it got; those four weeks seemed like a lifetime, and how joyous was the home coming, as the old admirers all had a warm welcome for the prodigal who had strayed away from a loving home. The fanciers missed the old familiar form that had been a welcome weekly visitor to thousands of their homes, and the gay and giddy dress assumed on the western visit did not wear well with its old patrons. Welcome back to Johnstown, N. Y., again, and we all hope the experiment will not be tried again.—American Poultry Advocate, Syracuse, N. Y.

Miss Marie M. Hilldorfer, the bright little daughter of the Hon. "Joe" Hilldorfer, Pittsburgh, Pa., had a full page advertisement in the Black Minorca catalog giving the winnings of her famous Buff Cochin Bantams at the leading shows, but how Pa Joe's handsome phiz came to be placed under his daughter's name in that "ad" is inexplicable. Is Joe masquerading as the new woman? It is up to Messrs. Selden, Skiles, Sutch and Moore of the Pittsburgh Fanciers' Club to explain this strange action of the Honorable Joseph P. Hilldorfer.

The thermometer registered four above zero Monday morning of this week, and on the same day a heavy snowstorm raged some sixteen miles from here. And this is spring! Chicken fanciers are almost in despair in this section over the cold and backward season, but chickens grow with a rush here when once started, in the months of May and June, for it is a congenial climate in summer for the feathered tribe.

The membership of the American Poultry Association has grown so rapidly that the thousand mark is in sight. And this leads us to remark that from what we have seen, heard rumored and whispered, a large slice of the members look upon the old society as a five hundred teated cow to be milked.

A reader desires to know which is the best rat-proof floor for a poultry house located in a cold climate. In our experience the following is about as good as we have found or tried: Cover floor beams with ½ inch mesh wire netting, on which place tar paper, and seal with matched spruce boards. Throw three to four inches of sharp gravel on the floor and the job is complete. The floor will be warm, dry, rat-proof, and can easily be kept clean by using a fine tooth rake every day to remove droppings, etc.

There are 108 varieties of fowls in the Standard, and no doubt all will be more or less represented at the World's Fair, St. Louis, in October. Superintendent Orr is busy all day handling letters containing applications to judge, and present indications are there will be more judges than varieties, provided all are engaged, and if it keeps up much longer even the number of fowls on exhibition will be less in number than the judicial applicants.

The Western Connecticut Poultry Association will hold its next annual exhibition at Danbury, Conn., November 30 to December 3, 1904. J. H. Drevenstedt will judge the American classes and D. A. Nichols all other classes. This is one of the oldest and most successful societies in the Nutmeg state and brings together a fine array of birds every year. Samuel Wilson is the president, and C. H. Brundage the secretary for 1904, and both are experienced and popular officials.

A bill was presented before the legislature at Albany, N. Y., last week by the Hon. John Orr of Orange, asking for an appropriation of three thousand dollars, to be offered to exhibitors of poultry from the Empire state at the World's Fair, St. Louis, next October. It has the support of many members and the indications are that it will pass both houses and receive the approval of the governor.

The American Fancier costs one dollar a year of fifty-two issues. Several subscribers have sent in two dollars each and claimed it was worth it, and one old subscriber sent five dollars for a five years' subscription. The facts speak louder than words.

The exact origin of the Silver Wyandotte has been somewhat clouded in mystery and caused considerable discussion and speculation. We recently wrote to Mr. Fred Guenther, Rochester, N. Y., who is an old admirer and fancier of the breed, requesting him to give us what information he could regarding the origin of Silver Wyandottes, and received the following reply:

"As to the origin of the Silver Wyandottes, the first knowledge I had dates back, I think, to 1878, when I first bred them, and at that time there were at least two distinct strains. I am very well acquainted with Mr. John P. Ray of Hemlock Lake, and we have had many talks about their origin. To start with, there were two strains at least at the above date, that I am sure of. One resembles Mr. Ray's birds, very dark, heavy lacing and small centers, which at times bred single combs; the other strain was made up of very large birds more like the Asiatic class, and I have seen male birds with pea-combs and the color of Dark Brahmas, in fact, I raised one myself. I also bred a pullet that was pencilled like a Dark Brahma, but not so clear. Those birds were more of the open center class, but always went to smash on breast. If I remember right, our strain was bred in the east, the other in the west, but I crossed the two and got better results. I am sure there was Dark Brahma blood in the one strain, but I could never trace any Hamburgh blood. I know the large birds, light in color, were entirely different from the dark colored ones and I think to-day there appear to be two distinct strains. You will find the very open laced birds of to-day are not the same type as the heavy edged ones."

Dark Brahma blood has been used frequently in the past ten years by some breeders to produce certain results, and with success. White Wyandotte blood has also been used to increase the open center effects. The Silver Wyandotte of to-day is a totally different creation from the Silvers of twenty years ago, although in some rare instances the original blood has remained intact and there are several strains that reproduce the type in vogue some ten years ago in a most decided and satisfactory manner, as far as females are concerned. But the great trouble that confronts Silver Wyandotte breeders to-day is the same as existed twenty years ago, viz.: The production of really fine cockerels that would reproduce themselves. A standard Silver Wyandotte male is a beautiful feathered creation, but an exceedingly difficult proposition to produce.

TABLE POULTRY.

The determination of the age at which chickens should be shut up in order to be fattened for the table is a point of very great importance, if first-class results are required. The general rule is to shut up the cockerels as soon as the two long central tail feathers overlap the straight feathers of the tail; and the pullets before they have laid.

The object of this as soon as the young birds begin to exercise their reproductive functions, they cease to be first-class table poultry. It is quite true they are edible, but they are not birds one would wish to place before a gourmet; and, what is still more to the point, not only is the quality lessened, but the quantity is seriously interfered with, for the birds cease to grow or fatten at the rate they did previously.

It is not generally known that by keeping each sex not only apart, but absolutely out of sight of the other, both the cockerels and pullets may be grown to a much larger size than usual, without the quality of the flesh being deteriorated. If the young cocks are separated before their tails begin to turn, and removed out of sight of the hens, they do not become hard and course, and grow to a larger size than they otherwise would. I am not recommending that they should be shut up in small runs or pens, but that they should be kept quite apart, and out of the sight of the other sex. If this is done, the severe and painful operation of caponizing is quite unnecessary; in fact, it was not generally performed even on the finest birds at the fat poultry show held in Paris during February.

The keeping of the sexual proclivities in abeyance by separation is sometimes practiced with regard to gold or Amherst pheasants. These birds, as every rearer of them is aware, are most pugnacious, the males killing not only one another, but also the females. Nevertheless, a score of gold cocks in full plumage may be kept in one inclosure, affording one of the most gorgeous sights in the animal kingdom, provided only that the whole of the males were put together whilst chicks, and have never been allowed to associate with the hens. Under these circumstances they live peaceably, but the introduction of a single hen is the signal for the commencement of a battle royal, from which it is probably not a single bird would emerge alive.

If a corresponding plan is adopted with poultry, the young cocks can be kept until late in the season, or even into the new year, without deterioration, but, on the other hand, with great improvement as regards size. The same remarks are true, mutatis mutandis, with regard to the hens. A fowl that has laid an egg is herself edible, but can not for a moment be compared to a pullet that has not laid; the quality, tenderness and sapidity of the flesh of the latter are greatly superior. Hence those pullets that are intended to be fattened for the table should not be allowed to run promiscuously with the other birds in the poultry yard; if first-class fattened poulards are required, they should be separated.

It may be said that this separation of the sexes in poultry is too much trouble to be generally followed. This may be true, but in many places where large numbers of poultry are reared for home consumption or the market, it could be done without any great increase of trouble, and the improvement in the birds would amply repay that which was necessary.

To those who rear for their own tables, and have facilities for carrying these suggestions in effect, I can strongly recommend them; but they must take the strictest precautions that the birds are separated before they have manifested any sexual proclivities.—W. B. Tegetmeier.

THE POULTRY SHOT AT WINDSOR, CONNECTICUT.

The Windsor Club held their show January 26-28, and as usual it was a good one, both as to quantity and quality. What was lacking was a kind of enthusiasm which is generally lacking, for that matter, when weather is unfavorable and few come out to see the birds. This has been a rough winter for poultry and the show at Windsor came during blinding snow storms which practically used up the trolley line, preventing friends from coming to the city, and frigid weathe which "shut in" everything else.

The coops this year were made by the Empire Cooping Company, and they were "all right." The club arranged with John R. Jones, "The Java Man" and veteran breeder of Suffield, to do the judging. Mr. Jones is very painstaking and his work was satisfactory. He takes ample time with every entry and when to this is added a thorough knowledge of the different breeds,there is a combination which exhibitors appreciate.

Barred and Buff Plymouth Rocks were out in force, and White Wyandotte class was a large and exceptionally meritorious one. Some fine buffs were shown. Rhode Island Reds came strongly to the front, both in the rose and single comb. The handsome silver-spangled Hamburgs attracted attention and the large collection of bantams delighted everybody. The officers of the club are: President, Lawrence Mullaley; vice president, Stanton F. Brown; secretary and treasurer, Clarence Bryant; assistant secretary, Edwin Snelgrove; executive committee, the officers, with T. P. Kinney, C. N. Griswold, Clarence H. Neimyer. PRACTICAL POINTERS

By Geo. E. Howell.

Mr. Howell, associate editor of The American Fancier, will furnish weekly reports on the egg and poultry market, and answer all questions submitted to him relating to commercial and practical poultry keeping. When replies are requested to be sent by letter, stamps must be enclosed and letters addressed to George E. Howell, 70 Christopher St., New York City.

Eggs.—The egg eating week of the year has past, the fore part of which presaged an egg famine, which was unfulfilled under the pressure of more liberal receipts, the market closing at 18½ for western and Kentucky, and nearby under grades. Fancy offerings sold in the open market at 21c.

The retailers who depend on selling eggs by the quarter's worth, are having a hard time this year, due to the ups and downs of the market. When a Jew gets a nice sign painted, offering, say 16 for a quarter, and next day finds himself face to face with a 14 for a quarter market, rendering "dot sign mit uselessness," he goes frantic, and swears his business "vas ruined by dem extra expenses."

The brightest spot in the egg business of 1904, has been the steady and constant demand of a top notch grade of eggs, an appreciative consumer tends to sharpen the quest of the storekeeper for the best in the market.

The demand for duck eggs is confined mostly to the Easter season, owing to the scarcity and high prices many stores made no effort to supply their customers. Goose eggs were even harder to get, and the wholesale price was 95 to $1.00 per dozen. Perhaps the knowledge that but few were to be had, made the quest more keen.

Poultry.—The market was totally in the hands of the receivers. Being holy week with the East Side people, most of the poultry was shipped alive, as your orthodox Jew must make his offering with live goods, and his table must be supplied with the same kind. Under the influence of this custom, the market raised from 14c to 16c a pound, and all offerings accepted.

On the other hand there was a great scarcity of fresh killed, it being a case of taking frozen or nothing, and the seller made the price.

The poultryman should neglect no opportunity to get a supply of skimmilk whenever offered him, under the present system of milk receiving depots and creameries, there is more to be had. Some localities have stations where only the cream is received, the balance either being turned back at the creamery, or separated before leaving the farm, a good thing for the farm and might be of advantage to any wide-awake poultryman living near. Thousands of cans of this refused milk are dumped daily throughout the country devoted to milk agriculture, and it is up to the chicken man to get his share.

Why does the hen cackle?—The Feather.

Well, brother, were you ever in the chicken house doing, say, a little repairing, maybe emulating a Barnum contortionist and have a half dozen fool hens set up a racket with their little cackles without an intermission? One who can keep one's temper such times and not throw things, need not shrink from the gaze of Dr. Parkhurst in his effort to hold down the lid.

Our brother might better have asked "Is there a way to stop a hen from cackling?" The cackle lies in the throat, and there are three ways of treating—strangulation, dislocation and bi-section.

I have just read a very interesting article on Arabian Horse Breeding in France, as that country's horse breeding affairs are carried on in the most scientific way, their operations must be accepted as a standard. 'Tis said by this writer that each succeeding generation bred in their new home under the influence of civilization, loses much of the dash and spirit so typical of the breed, and fresh importations from the mountains and plains of Arabia must constantly be made or else the inevitable—degeneration.

How far this applies to poultry, little has been learned, though it can be said of the American originated breeds, they like the American people, have a habit of adapting themselves to all climates and modes of life, no matter where you put them, they immediately get into action, and show their superiority.

It is not always necessary in order to succeed with poultry, to discard the old favorite and take up the newest thing in chickens, many a fancier who loves his old timers quietly plods along without fireworks or trading stamps, improves as he goes and reaps all the pleasures of success and much of the money.

When you have learned the characteristics of a breed and delight in handling them, stick to them, no matter how many other breeds you add, stick to the old one with a determination to win. Indifferent breeding is like a poorly rolled cigar, you go through the motions and get a little smoke, but derive no pleasure therefrom.

THE NEST.

Different Ways of Making It—Nature's Plan the Best.

By W. Cook.

To some it may appear that making a nest is a very small matter. It must, however, be remembered that the nest is where the chickens are hatched. I have often noticed that wild birds make their nests, oh! so carefully. They take such pains with them, no matter what kind of bird it is that is making the nest. If it is a chaffinch's nest, whether it is found on the south or in the north, it will be made just the same shape and style, and of the same material, if it is to be found, and, if not, the nearest substitute is used. The same applies to all kinds of birds. They all appear to have laws and regulations of their own, and each member of the family carries them out. It is an interesting study to those who have time to devote to it. When a boy I learned much in studying nature, which has been of great assistance throughout my life. One thing struck me forcibly, and that was that all the birds which made their nests early in the year took care to line them well. This, I came to the conclusion, was to keep the cold east winds out, and to protect the eggs and the young ones when they came. The whistling thrush lines her nest with mud. Although this has not much warmth in it, the strong mud walls keep the frost and cold winds out, so that they do not penetrate through.

Those birds which build their nests in March take particular care to build it of warm material, and line it with moss, feathers and short hair from the horses' bodies. It is wonderful where they get it all from, but as the horses shed their coats the birds must pick it up. Now fowls are not so keen as are the wild birds as regards making their nests, but notwithstanding this, if they are left to themselves to make the nests and hatch the chickens, they generally bring off large broods, and they are usually very strong and hardy. I had a hen set away in January of this year, and she brought out a chicken from each egg. They were hatched early in February, and they have been right out in the open ever since, having no shelter but a small coop where the hen is. Every one is healthy and strong. She made her nest on the ground, with a little fine hay and dead leaves at the bottom of it. The hen was very careful to scratch a hole in the grounds. It was made round so that her strong wings could clip the eggs nicely and keep them safe from the cold winds.

There are different ways of setting hens, and a person may be successful either way or in all. Nature must be copied as closely as possible. Some hens have been known to sit in a draughty place and then to hatch out a fair brood of chickens. Perhaps if another hen, to all appearance as good a sitter as the first, sat there she would not hatch out a single chicken. And why? Because she would not clip her eggs so closely as the other one did. At another time a hen will lay in a wooden nest box with scarcely a bit of straw in it, and sit her time, and then bring out a chicken from almost every egg. It may perhaps be suggested by some that this then is the proper way to set a hen, as the results in former cases have been so good. To test this let a person try it and see the results. Probably there would not be a single chicken.

I was taught to make a nest with a little straw in a nest box or basket. In this style of nest the eggs roll on the top of each other, resulting in at least two or three of them being broken. When the hen has been sitting a few days the nest becomes flat at the bottom and the eggs roll away from each other, and in this way the outside eggs get chilled. As a hen turns her eggs at least twice in twenty-four hours, those which were in the centre of the nest soon are on the outside, and in this way a large number are quickly spoilt. Wheat straw is very porus; each stem is hollow, and when the cold east wind is blowing, or it is a sharp frost, the cold air is conveyed to the eggs. The outsides ones become the most chilled. They are often down to 60 degrees, while those which are under the hen's body register from 100 degrees to 104 degrees. This can be proved by placing a thermometer under the hen. If a nest is not properly made and with suitable materials the chickens will die at all stages, from the third to the seventeenth day, and then people wonder how it is there are so many dead chickens in the shell. The wonder is that any of them come to maturity. Chickens sometimes die in their shells when the nest is properly made and the hens well treated, but deaths can often be avoided by attention to these details.

When a hen sets away and arranges matters for herself she makes her nest on the ground, making it very round, so that she may turn her head or sit in any position and yet cover her eggs nicely. If fairly dry there is always a damp moisture comes up to the eggs from the ground, which helps to keep moist the inside of the egg (the membrane). This is one reason why the eggs hatch out so well. Partridges and pheasants generally hatch out every fertile egg, which is owing to the regular temperature maintained by the hen. I have always found it best to make the nest of something solid, such as earth. When a hen's nest is made on the ground it should be scooped out and the hole made very round and deeper in the middle than at the sides. A nest should be made so that a hen can sit comfortably.

When a nest is flat at the bottom the hen sits most uncomfortably, as her legs have to lie flat, which often produces cramp. When the nest is flat the wings cannot reach the bottom of the nest, in fact a hen with short wings cannot do so at all. If the nest is made properly no matter how the hen sits she is comfortable, as the nest is made a little on the slope. The shanks of the fowl rest on the sloping side of the nest, and also the wings on the side. As the nest is rounded and well backed up all round, the wings rest comfortably, no cold can get to the eggs if the earth is well beaten down.

Whatever the nest is made of it should be damp, so that it holds together and thus forms a crust. It is well to put a little slaked lime in the nest after it is well beaten down. At this time of the year it is well to line the nest with a few short feathers. These should be laid carefully so that they are nice and level all round the nest. Then sprinkle a little fine hay and beat it well down. It is very important to get the hay very close, then the eggs do not bind together when the hen turns them. When a nest is made in the way described thirteen eggs can be set in it, and the hen will cover them better than nine if set in the ordinary way. When I used to make my own nests and set the hens myself I never put less than fifteen in one nest in the coldest weather. In March and April I have put as many as twenty-five eggs under one hen. One year I had two hens hatch forty-five chickens, one had twenty-two and the other twenty-three, all strong healthy chickens. I did this just to try the experiment. I had several persons to see the hens when they were sitting, and I asked one to look under and count the eggs, and he said that it would be running a risk of spoiling the eggs. I told him that was nonsense. After eggs have been sat upon fifteen or seventeen days you can take them one hundred miles and no harm would be done. He shook his head. I always like to prove any statement which I make, and I told him if he would come on the seventeenth day I would move both the hen and the eggs. He came in the evening, and I took the hen a mile and a half. It was at the time freezing, and I did not cover the eggs up. They were in a wooden measure. I made two fresh nests and then set the eggs, and the result was forty-five chickens. I mention this so that your readers need not be afraid to touch the egg or move the hen; but I would here say it is a far better plan not to put so many eggs under hens; too few rather than too many are to be recommended.

When setting my hens I put as many eggs under them as I can; then from the seventh to the tenth day I test them, and take away all the unfertiles; then set other eggs. For instance, suppose I set three hens, and on testing their eggs find thirteen or fourteen unfertile, I put all the rest of the eggs under two other hens, and then set the third hen with fresh eggs together with three more hens (providing I have been able to procure this number). In this way I make the most of the hens, and no time is wasted. If there are too many fertile ones for one or two hens, put the remaining few under the third, giving her some fresh eggs also, but warming them first.

As regards sitters for the early season, Brahmas and Cochins are admirable. When crossed they are much better even than in the pure state. When pure their wings are very short. They have a good deal of fluff and long feathers, which cover the eggs from view, but the feathers on the body are so long the heat from the hen's body does not reach the eggs. When a Brahma or Cochin hen is set the nest should be made rather deep, so her wings can reach the side of the nest, and she should not have so many eggs put under her as other breeds. A good cross-bred hen will cover three eggs more than a Cochin or Brahma To make good sitters Cochins and Brahmas should be crossed with Plymouth Rocks or game. The latter breed is the best, as they have strong wings and their feathers are short. They make splendid sitters and mothers, and will defend their chickens against all comers. They can be depended on, and even when sent on a long railway journey, which unsettles so many hens, they will sit well.

When fresh eggs are put under a hen which has been sitting for several days, say seven or nine, they should be warmed, as when put under cold they will give the others a chill. It is best to put them in a box with some hot bran in it; the bran can be warmed in a bag and then put in the oven. I mention this because if the box is put in it will very likely catch fire. If the fertile eggs are put in the hot bran they will keep all right for six or eight hours if the box is wrapped in a piece of old flannel. The fresh eggs should be put under the hens, and after remaining there for six or eight hours those which have been in the box can be placed under as well. This to some will appear a very troublesome proceeding, but it must be understood that this treatment is merely required where only a few hens are set, where there are more they can be managed differently. Some people set the eggs and do not trouble to test them at all during the time of sitting; they merely allow the eggs to remain under the hens for twenty-one days, and then are much surprised when they find that two or three chickens only come out.

Eggs should not only be tested when they have been sat on for seven day, but also at the fifteenth day. This is in case some of them have got addled (the germ dead, which brings decomposition). In some cases when the shells are rather thin they burst, and even should they not do this, the bad eggs are much better taken away from the good ones, as when the chickens are dead in the shell the eggs lose their heat when the hens are off the nest. When there is a live chicken in each egg they retain the heat for a long time. All who set eggs should practice testing them, then they will soon be able to tell when an egg has gone wrong. When testing eggs and the operator is not sure whether the germ is alive or not he should put a ring right round the large end of the egg with his lead pencil. These can then easily be detected, and it saves overhauling the others. To make sure whether the embryo is dead, examine one that is alive and compare the two.

Egg testers are made for this purpose, but they can be manufactured at home by cutting a hole in a flat piece of cardboard. The hole must not be quite so large as an egg. The cardboard should not be less than six inches square, and one side should be inked over so that it is quite black. This is the side that is to be held nearest the operator. A lamp should be placed on the table, turning the light up rather strong. Hold this egg-tester in front of the lamp and then place the egg in the hole in the cardboard. The latter shades the light from the eyes of the operator, and shines very strongly through the egg. It is a good plan first to look through a new laid one. This will be found to look quite clear—all very much the same. When a strong light is beyond them they look a reddish shade to the operator. Sometimes there are a few dark specks inside the shells. When these appear the eggs are more trouble to test, and particularly those with brown shells. These spots are nothing to an experienced hand, but it is for those who are young and inexperienced in the art of egg testing that this article is written.

When an egg is fertile there is a dark speck in it. If the operator cannot see the speck quite clearly the egg should be turned around slowly, then the dark speck can be easily discerned. When an egg has been sat upon for seven days the dark spot is about the size of a small pea. This is the chicken's eye, which is always formed first. Sometimes an egg

Our breeding yards not only contain the leading winners at the late New York show, but were selected from yards that have done the bulk of the winning at Madison Square Garden for the past six years. At Rochester we won seven out of a possible ten first prizes.

Eggs for hatching orders will be booked for a very limited number of eggs from yards composed entirely of New York and Rochester winners at $10.00 per 13 straight. All other pens $3.00 per 13; $5.00 for 26.

A Hatching Wonder

The new "CYCLE" Hatcher. The perfected result of the latest discoveries in artificial incubation. A wonder of the 20th century. An entirely original and novel method of hatching and brooding chicks. It requires only the self-supplied moisture of the egg itself. No egg tray doors to open. Regulation automatic and scientifically exact. Holds from 50 to 10,000 and can be set when started with 50 or more eggs per day until its capacity is complete, making unnecessary to fill entire machine at starting. Eggs cooled without removal from machine. Will hatch hens, ducks, geese, or turkey eggs equally well and at the same time. Made entirely of metal and asbestos; fire-proof and will not warp, swell, shrink or crack.

A hen never hatches better or stronger chickens than when setting on the ground, in which event the underside of the eggs are cooler than the upper surface, and the "Cycle Hatcher" is the only machine built following closely the natural laws of incubation covering this very essential point, as well as many others.

When the fresh air enters the machine near the center tube it carries with it the moisture it naturally contains. On becoming heated it rapidly expands as it is carried along the heated surface, and because the upper metal of the egg chamber is still warmer than the incoming air, the moisture is carried along until it reaches a cooler surface, where it condenses, leaving the dry air to rise again to be forced out in waves by the rapidly expanding air above.

It would be impossible to get the same results from a wooden machine or one made from any other absorbing material. In the Cycle the only thing that can absorb moisture is the asbestos felt directly under the eggs, where it should be, which never becomes absolutely dry during the process of incubation.

50 egg size only $5.00. Full particulars promptly furnished on application.

would look cloudy, and the dark speck is not distinguishable, in such cases it may be considered doubtful, as the germ has commenced to develop, and is dead. These are the eggs which ought to have a mark put around them. They should be tried a few days later on, as they can then easily be tested and distinguished from those which contain live chickens.

After eggs which have gone on all right have been sat on thirteen to fourteen days they look quite black, with the exception of the large end, which is quite clear. This is empty, and is where the egg chamber it. As the chickens grow in the shells this fills up, but when the shells are very large sometimes it does not fill quite up, although they hatch out. Game chickens invariably fill the shells up before they liberate themselves. Some people think that a chicken cannot hatch unless it fills the shell right up to the top. This is altogether wrong, as many thus hatch out, sometimes with quite half an inch at the top of the egg empty. As a rule a chicken from a medium sized egg is much stronger than one from a large egg. When eggs are set they should always have the date put upon them at the large end, so that when eggs are put under hens or incubators at various periods they can be detected at once. Mistakes can be easily made when there are chickens coming along at various stages, and those which should be hatching are more backward than they should be.

Referring to testing the eggs, I do not use any tester, as I like to try them with a candle or a small benzoline lamp. The large end of the egg should be held by the fingers of the right hand, and the small end by the left hand. The egg should be turned round slowly, and it can be tested quite easily if the operator is careful. If the testing is carried on as it should be good broods of chickens may be expected, and no waste of time. When the eggs and hens are left to themselves for twenty-one days, and a number of the eggs are addled and unfertile, there is a great waste of time. Supposing that five hens are sitting at one time, and more than half the eggs are unfertile, it not only wastes the hen's time, but the season is going by, and this prevents the owner from having as many early chickens as he ought. It saved from 20 to 25 per cent per year to test the eggs, and especially those set early in the season, and takes away all the clear and addled ones. Then hens, too, require managing properly. Some have an idea that the hens should not be taken off the nest at all, but this is altogether wrong.—Poultry, England.

WHAT HAS BEEN DONE WITH THE LIGHT BRAHMA.

John Rumbold.

I am very much interested in the final work of the revision committee on the standard of this my favorite breed. The work of the committee at its first meeting was very nearly satisfactory to me; in fact was along the lines I have been fighting for for the last twenty years. I have looked carefully over all the papers for something to get a foothold of hope that the work would be left where it was first revised, rather than to make any backward steps from the good work already done. I also had one letter saying the standard would be as first revised, but in some paper I have read but can't get hold of the article at present, I saw that Mr. McGrew presented the petition of the N. E. Light Brahma Club against having any change made in tail and wings, and that Mr. McG. endorsed said petition and it was agreed to. If this was correct, then the committee took a retrograde step that the breed will have to suffer for until such time as the A. P. A. sees fit to appoint a committee that has the good of the breed at heart. It looks like butting one's head against the wall to oppose the old tried friends of the breed in New England, but I have my own ideas based on breeding for an ordinary lifetime of man, and I have never hesitated to state my ideas upon the type and color best for the Light Brahma. The present standard has not been in the interest of the breed, to my thinking; not that the standard has been so much at fault as the too frequent wrongful interpretation of it. It calls for medium length of neck, back and legs; that is well enough, but birds that were short in these sections have been the most frequent winners until the complaint became general—the Brahmas are Cochinized. And so they have been, hence a good reason why the standard should be made to read—rather long—in all these sections. For as fine a type of what a Light Brahma male should be I refer the reader to the cut in the design on the catalogue of the American Light Brahma Club, which I will be pleased to send to any and all who wish it. All breeders have been a unit as to what color the hackle should be—a broad, jet black center, in both sexes, without any break, and laced all round with clean white; no smoke, but clear white. When it came to wings then they—or part of them—showed the "white feather." Any old thing most was good enough; primaries black and white, black to predominate. How much should they predominate? Just so there was a fraction more black than white they were good enough—for some people—but not for all, I am pleased to say. There is but one wing that is proper, but one that is right, and that is the best one nature has or can produce. I challenge any one of those breeders who are satisfied with one of those mottled wings to produce a hen with a passable wing that hadn't a better wing as a pullet than the standard now calls for. This is my thirty-fourth year as a breeder of Light Brahmas and I never saw one of those half and half wings amount to anything after a moult. Nor do I believe anyone else ever did. Oh, says my dissenting friend. They breed so many black backs. What if they do? Breed the black backs out and the black wings in. If it is done in some, it can be done in more, and we Americans are just the boys that can do it. Notwithstanding these people kick so hard against a black wing being standard, let one have a hen or pullet with an extra black wing and they can talk you nearly blind over them. I know just what I am talking about here, for I called the attention of one of these erring brethren to what he was saying about one of his pullets that had a wing to tickle the heart of the best of us. The wing that is most handsome and the best that has been or can be produced is the best one for the breed—the percentage of this kind that can be bred has no place in the argument. Get all the good ones you can next year and you will be likely to double this year's output of crackerjacks. For males, primaries black, or with a short narrow lacing on lower web; females, primaries black with lacing nearly the length of web of feather on lower web. That is the most hansome, consequently the best wing the breed can have. Can they be bred so? I say yes. Get the A. L. B. C. catalogue and see; those pictures are from feathers just as they were plucked, and the female primary was pulled from a pullet by the Boston 1903 cup winner. So you see they are the kind that takes the judge's eye. You can get this book by addressing the writer at 119 W. Barre St., Baltimore, Md.

GAME TALK.

Editor American Fancier:

The paragraph announcing the death of Capt. Heaton, in your recent issue, will be sad news to the game fancy the world over, for the captain was surely for many years one of the stalwarts and a great leader in Black Reds. It is perhaps safe to say that Capt. Heaton paid and received higher prices for Black Red Exhibition Game fowls than any other fancier within memory, prominent among his purchases being Mr. Ainscough's young cock, winner of the cup at Birmingham a few years ago at £200 ($1,000.00,)but he not only purchased the best at big prices; he was also a famous breeder and altogether one of the best Game fanciers of the past and present has passed away.

The Game fancy, in Great Britain and America, is not in condition to withstand successfully the removal, either by death or otherwise, of such pillars as the gentleman above referred to, and your recent summing up of the situation with reference to the present status of the various popular breeds is, I think, about right.

To be successful with exhibition game it seems as though considerable money had to be invested and the original investment added to from time to time. Most of the wealthy Americans who have taken them up and been successful for a time have either dropped out gradually or unloaded in a hurry. Some started out under most favorable auspices and with good managers. There, however, is no reason why numerous small breeders should not exist, taking up but one variety and sticking to it, with a few birds of the best blood to begin with. These can be secured at moderate prices and if carefully handled are very likely to show good results.

It is notoriously true that exhibition games require the greatest care to rear successfully and secure the size and stamina necessary for first class show form, but when one finds out how to manage them the pleasure he derives from his birds is very cheap at the price and when matured they are fairly hardy, at least this has been my experience. Of course an amateur who gets to the point of hesitancy between black red game and "Buckey Blues," should choose the latter in every instance, because he would never have any success with the Game. The Game bantam fancy is apparently in a much more flourishing condition. There are more fanciers, more competition and more people raise a large number of birds each season. Consequently there are more "flyers" produced and the selection of show and breeding birds is greater. The bantams, on the other hand, are not nearly so difficult to bring to maturity as the large Game. The club offers yearly many good inducements to bring out a strong line-up and it is altogether too bad that such a very slim collection of Game fowls has been exhibited at the recent New York shows. Matters are not really quite so bad as they might seem, for there are fanciers in possession of birds which if they would only brace up and come together, would lend new impetus to the occasion and perhaps become the means of a more widespread appreciation of these magnificent birds.

I would be very glad to learn the opinions of others interested, especially to "smaller fry" like myself, who need stirring up.

Horace Havemeyer, - Stamford, Conn.

IT'S A CINCH

to breed the BUFF WYANDOTTE winners if one has the right kind of stock, SUITABLY MATED. It's one thing to secure individuality, but to reproduce or BREED ON, it's absolutely necessary that a specimen's ancestry for A TERM OF YEARS be of the very best of it's time. "Like begets like," OR LIKE ITS ANCESTRY—more often perhaps the latter. What does prove a success from a breeder's standpoint is INDIVIDUALITY BACKED UP WITH A RICH INHERITANCE of first prize winners for many generations. So far, doubtless you agree with me. Now, where better can you find the desired NICKING qualities than from a strain that has been successfully maintained before the public since the origin of the breed?

For FIVE YEARS IN SUCCESSION we have won at New York or Boston THREE OF THE FIRST PRIZES; one year winning ALL THE FIVE FIRSTS AT NEW YORK; another year ALL FIRSTS AT BOSTON, save on pen; each year winning MORE FIRSTS THAN ALL COMPETITORS COMBINED . . . . . .

We have birds for sale that descend straight from these first prize winners. Past years matings were headed by such males as follows: 1-3-5 COCKS, 2 and 3 OPEN CLASS, and 1 and 2 PEN COCKERELS, BOSTON, 1903, also the sires of the four mentioned cockerels, Talk about male producing strains, WHERE IS ITS EQUAL? We don't charge any more for OUR KIND than those claimed to be (?) just as good. Write us for anything you want.
We shall sell eggs at $3.00 per thirteen straight, We are now preparing a circular giving our method of mating which has proven so successful. It is free to those who send for it. Egg orders booked now for future delivery, insuring shipment when wanted. (Send for Catalogue.)

A Worthy Gem

The Gem Incubator has established its intrinsic worth by its wonderful hatching qualities in the hands of hundreds of poultry raisers. "It is certainly a gem" is an expression heard wherever a Gem Incubator or Brooder is in use. Not a high priced hatcher (costs much less than most others) but a high per cent hatcher. Has many features not equaled in any other machine. Send for new, free catalogue.

BARRED AND BUFF ROCKS.

I have won the past season at the following shows: Fitchburg, Mass., Stamford, Conn., South Framingham, Mass., Manchester, N. H., New Bedford, Mass. The above Barred Cockerels were all sired by 3d cockerel, 1903, Madison Square Garden, New York winner, 63 cockerels in this class. Reliable Poultry Journal February, 1903, liked this cockerel above all others in the show. I have a few cockerels sired by above cockerel for sale from $4.00 upwards. Standard weight, of very even color, barred well all over. If you want to improve your blood these cockerels are what you want. Money returned if birds don't suit you. I have had my pens mated up by one of the leading Poultry Judges in America—4 pens headed by high scoring cockerels. I have also one pen of Buff Rocks. For the cockerel in this pen and two pullets I gave Mr. Higgins, of Orange, Mass., $75. I have not many sittings to dispose of therefore have your orders booked early. My eggs will be from same pens as I breed from myself. Choicest Eggs $2.00 a sitting.

Capons of Great Value in Rearing Chickens.

In these days where there are so many varieties of non-sitting fowls, it is necessary to have some extraneous means of rearing the chickens. It is not at all difficult to hatch chickens, but there are many who, though they may use some artificial method of hatching, prefer to have the chicks reared in what is called a rational manner. I have before mentioned that turkeys can be used for this purpose, but I wish to quote from a very old work as to the training of capons to perform maternal duties. The work referred to is that written by M. De Reamur in the earlier part of last century. The copy I have is dated 1750. The author was a member of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Paris, and he made a great many experiments in the artificial rearing and hatching of fowls.

Now it has been for many years a well known fact, says M. De Reamur, that a cock may be made to contract both the inclination and the skill which seem peculiar to the mother hen alone. Gesner says in his ornithology, that this fact was attested by a great many moderns of his own time, and he even quotes Albert the Great who asserts that he has seen a cock foster chickens. Willoughby, in his ornithology, speaks of the same fact as an eye witness of it. He says that he had more than once, and with great pleasure, seen a capon perform very well all the functions of an affectionate mother, with chickens entrusted to his care.

Almost all the authors who wrote on rural economy have taught us the manner in which we ought to give a capon an inclination for the leading and tending of new born chickens; however, country people are not sufficiently informed that capons may be substituted instead of hens for that kind of business; at least our peasants are not so mindful of giving them that employment as they ought to be. I have had many repeated opportunities of convincing myself, with my own eyes, that capons perform this service very well. A lady, a relation of mine, and generally respected by all who know her for her good nature and extraordinary sense, has a vast number of chickens brought up every year, and not one of them taken care of by any but capons. I have seen very frequently at her castle of "Vanjour," by Livry, about two hundred chickens that had only three or four capons for their leaders; for one of the advantages to be got by giving them that office is that a capon may be trusted with two or three times as many chickens as may be given to a hen.

Another advantage of this economy is, that you may trust a capon with chickens at any time you please; he is always ready to accept of those you think fit to commit to his tuition; he even seems to be prouder in proportion as their number increases, whereas, hens abuse the young chicks offered them when their age is a little different from that of those they have hatched and tended from the moment of their birth. Another benefit resulting from the custom of entrusting capons with chickens is, that you lose not the eggs which your hens would have laid during part of the time that they would have been busy tending their brood; but the desire of laying eggs which is suspended by that care, is sometimes too soon renewed in them; in which case they give up to themselves the care of chickens as yet too weak, whereas they are never given over by the capons but when they are no longer pleased to be under tuition.

After recounting the old and in many cases cruel methods formerly adopted for inducing capons to accept the care of chickens, our author says:

What is it then we are to do besides the foregoing things, to cause capons to contract an affection for chickens like what hens have for those they have hatched? A longer time must be spent upon it; we must give them an education, not the work of one single night or of a day, but which must be continued for several days together. Having at several times attempted in vain to communicate to my three capons by the aforesaid methods the talent I wanted them to acquire, I sent them at last to a mistress of great skill—the woman who had the management of the poultry yard of the above mentioned lady. They came out of her school very well instructed, but not till ten or twelve days after they had been put under her discipline. Her method is neither to pluck the feathers off their belly, nor to rub it with nettles, nor to make them drunk, although nothing of all this is contrary to the intended purpose. She keeps a capon alone for a day or two, in a pretty deep but not very wide bucket, which she covers with boards. She takes him several times a day out of that bucket to put him under a basket where he finds some food. Soon after she gives him for his companions two or three of those little chickens who have already some strength, and are fledged so far as to have some feathers in their wings, and even an appearance of feathers in their tail; she leaves them with him, and takes them under the cage, and makes them eat together there. If he abuses them she parts them for that time, and the next day puts the same or some other chickens with the capon into the basket which lets in but very little light.

By means of these operations, repeated several times a day and for some days together, the capon will contract a habit of living with two or three chickens. The number of these must be increased by degrees. He accustoms himself to the company of the last as he has done to that of the first, and when you have at length put seven or eight chickens with him and he seems to have taken a liking to them, you may afterwards give a greater number to him without any risk, he being now brought up to the point of showing the better satisfaction as the number of the chickens put under his conduct shall be greater.

SILVER WYANDOTTE COCK.

He may then be set at liberty and will set on them as hens do on their chickens whenever they stand in need of being warmed; he will lead them to the places where he thinks they can find any food; he will cluck like the hens to call back those that may straggle too far from him; he will redouble his clucking when he finds some dainty bits to invite them to come and share them with him. If it is a piece of bread or a long worm he will divide it into many small portions for them, be enchanted to see them eat it greedily, and will deprive himself of it for their sake.

The first days of his education are the most difficult. They seldom pass without the death or laming of some little chickens. These dismal scenes must be expected without being disheartened by them, as they are not to be repeated afterwards—they are the price of instruction of the capon. By means of the same education you will be equally successful in causing cocks to grow as fond as capons of leading and tending young chickens. I thought I had sent to school three capons, but one of them had no other appearance of a capon than his comb being cut off. He was a perfect cock in every other respect. Nor did he for that come home less well instructed than the real capons. He had led and tended very well the chickens he was trusted with. He never happened to neglect them but for a few moments when he saw a hen go by, whom he judged to be disposed to accept of his favors. This was a very fit object to give him some interruption; he could not resist it; his chickens were forgotten for that instant; he left them abruptly to attack her, and had no sooner obliged her to comply with his desifes, but he coolly returned to them.

When capons and cocks have once been taught how to nurse chickens, it is a talent they keep to the end of their lives, nor are they ever tired with that occupation. If you leave them unemployed for several months together, as is generally done during the latter end of August and all winter you will find them again endowed in the spring with the talent you have given them, or a very few lessons will suffice to make them resume it.

This somewhat quaint description of the process by which capons are taught to undertake maternal duties is as corrrect now as it was when written. I do not think that cocks can be trained so easily as the author would seem here to assume, and even if taught they are uncertain, but so far as capons are concerned there can be no doubt that they make reliable mothers and are capable of brooding a large number of chickens.—S. B.

THE NEW ILLUSTRATED STANDARD.

As all know who have been reading the poultry journals, the annual meeting of the American Poultry Association at Rochester, February 1-5, 1904, accepted the work of the revision committee done at Buffalo, in May, 1903. Of course some changes and additions to the original report were made, but all agree that the work as a whole is very complete and will doubtless prove more satisfactory to fanciers and more instructive to amateurs than any former issue of the Standard.

The duty of finally editing the completed report, of approving the details of the artists' work as they are finished, of receiving bids from publishers and of contracting for the issuing of the book, was assigned to five men, to be known as the publication committee; F. L. Kimmey, D. Lincoln Orr, G. M. Curtis, J. H. Drevenstedt and T. E. Orr.

This committee, after doing as much preliminary work by correspondence as possible, held its first meeting at the Arlington Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., March 22, 23 and 24.

As per agreement at Rochester, a committee of representative Game and Game Bantam men, Messrs. Cornman and Rulifson, were present and made suggestions that were approved by the committee concerning the illustrations of their favorites, and these fanciers left assuring the committee that the work proposed will prove eminently satisfactory to their constituents.

The heaviest burden upon the committee was deciding finally upon the sketches submitted by various artists who had been requested to compete. And still more difficult was it for the committee to reject some cuts that had been assigned definitely, but which failed to prove satisfactory. This was done fearlessly, however, the committee knowing from the instructions given at Rochester that they must individually and collectively approve the final work or themselves bear the blame. A total of eighty-four full page illustrations and of thirty illustrations for the Glossary were ordered, and these are divided among four artists, Messrs. Sewell, Burgess, Graham and Schilling. Of course, as is well known, the greater part of the work falls to Mr. Sewell, and the time for the completion and publishing of the new Standard depends more upon the rapidity of his work than upon any other one thing.

The book, when completed, will be very handsome, 5¾x8 inches outside measurement, and will contain about 256 pages of fine, heavy paper of a grade specially adapted to the best of cut work. It will be bound in a beautiful dark olive green cloth, with round corners, and the front cover will be handsomely embossed with a design appropriate to poultry, the lettering in gold.

No less than a dozen different publishing houses expressed a desire to bid on the work, and complete specifications, together with a bound dummy of the exact size of the book have been submitted to each firm, so that all may bid on exactly the same basis. One clause of the specifications provides that before any printing is done an extra set of copper-faced electrotypes covering every page of the book is to be furnished the Association, so that in case of fire destroying one set the other set may be saved.

Sealed bids are to reach the secretary at Beaver, Pa., on or before April 25th, and on April 29th the Publication committee will meet at the Arlington Hotel, Buffalo, to open the bids and if satisfactory to award the contract.

It is expected that the first section of the book can be put to press in June and the last section in August, but owing to much work yet to be done on the illustrations and the great necessity for care in the completion of all details there is no hope of getting the book in the hands of purchasers before September, and possibly not before October.

In the meantime, that is until the new Standard is put upon the market, the 1903 edition will continue to be the rule for judges placing awards. A few copies of this edition still remain. Those who wish copies should order at once, either through this journal or from the secretary.

In this connection allow me to say to your readers that the official proceedings of the Indianapolis and Rochester meetings are now in the hands of the printers, but cannot be completed for some days. A full list of all life and annual members will be included. Many annual members who have joined within the past year should remit me $8 at once and have their names transferred to the life list, thus saving all further trouble and expense.

All who have applied for membership since the Rochester meeting will be listed in the proceedings in the same way as was done last year. Send on your $10 for life membership and you will always be glad to say "I became a member of the American Poultry Association the year the Illustrated Standard was published."

COLOR.

By C. J. Davies.

Coloration plays so important a part in the value of our different varieties of fancy fowls and pigeons that a few words about the physiology of color may be of interest and assistance to breeders.

To begin with, as is well known, colour in birds and animals is either due to definite pigments in the skin, or partly to optical effects owing to the scattering, diffraction, or unequal refraction of the light rays. The nature of a great number of the pigments has been chemically studied, but so numerous are they that there is still much work to be done in this direction, and the datum is by no means complete.

If the feather of a bird be examined it will be seen that the shaft is composed of a horny cuticle, in which are the pigment cells, with a pith of soft white material. At the base, in many colored feathers, the quill is transparent, and it gets gradually darker towards the tip of the feather. Feathers, in reference to their chemical composition, may be regarded as indurated albumen, their ultimate elements being carbon, oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen, and sulphur. The ash of feathers, especially of birds which live on grain, contains, however, a large proportion of silica. Variation in the amount of pigment present accounts for difference in shade of color, dark colors being due to much pigment.

It is possible that color may appear very different to the various animals and birds from what it does to us. An egg which, for instance, seems to our eyes to be bright blue and extremely conspicuous may to the eye of the hawk or crow be the least visible of colors, and for this reason have been perfected by natural selection. The definite pigments, which are the commonest source of color, absorb all the rays of light except those of a particular wave length, thus giving the effect of that particular color which they reflect. It used to be thought that white color denoted entire absence of pigment! lately a white pigment has been discovered in certain forms. As a rule, however, it may be considered that white birds are without it.

The color of blood is due to haemoglobin, which may, by proper chemical treatment, be resolved into a reddish brown substance with an iron basis, called haematin. The proportion of iron has been said to form from 0.43 to 0.05 per cent of the dried corpuscles, or six per cent. of the pure coloring matter. The corpuscles of bird blood are spherical, and in this respect differ from those of mammals, which are globular.

The brown color of birds may be due to either of two distinct pigments which give different chemical reactions; the green color of the turacou is due to quite a different pigment from that which causes the green of the parrot,the actual pigment of the latter being yellow. Sometimes, on the contrary, differently colored animals have in reality the same pigments. In certain instances the two sexes of birds differ in color of plumage, but possess similar pigments. The cause of the difference in this case is a variation in the structure of the feathers in each sex, the resulting colors appearing different to our eye.

The metallic lustre so charactertistic of the original Langshan and the Archangel pigeon is due to the presence of excessively fine striae—small channels or thread-like lines—upon the surface of the feathers, which cause the reflection of more than one light ray.

What causes color? There is no doubt that environment plays a great part in the perfecting and preservation of the color of birds and mammals, and we could cite numerous cases where coloration appears to bear very little relation to natural selection. This, however, does not account for the cause of color. We have not yet discovered the cause of any form of variation, but we can at least consider the most likely factors in the subject under discussion.

Canary breeders would unhesitatingly place food as the cause of variation in the color of their pets, the system of mixing cayenne pepper with the food to produce orange red birds being familiar to every fancier. Dr. Sauermann made some exhaustive experiments to discover which of the chemical substances in cayenne wrought the change. He found that the pigment, capsicin, which causes the red color of the pepper, when given to yellow canaries alone did not in the slightest degree affect them, though parti-colored birds did react, the brown parts of the feathers becoming lighter. A fatty substance called triolein appeared to convey the pigment, and change the yellow color to red; and not only canaries, but other birds were influenced by it in a similar way. The same investigator found that white fowls showed traces of yellow after being fed with cayenne, the breast feathers, among other tracts, becoming particularly affected, thus proving that change of diet may produce partial alteration of color. It is further said that when fed with carmine, yellow color in the birds is destroyed, and they become white again.

Feeding on hemp seed is said by Darwin to cause bullfinches and certain other birds to turn black.

The fact that dwellers on the banks of the Amazon can make the common green parrot become beautifully variegated with red and yellow feathers by feeding them on the fat of Siluroid fishes is often quoted; the pigment is probably allied to that which causes the change in canaries.

Very few authentic experiments in color feeding have been made with animals. The late Sir Everett Millais succeeded in producing heavily-marked basset hounds by giving his in-whelp bitches saccharated carbonate of iron, but he considered that its action was that of a tonic only, and that there was no actual transference of pigment.

It is certainly possible, if not probable, that food may be one of the chief causes of color variation. In some of the lower forms it has been proved to be so; for instance, the large Tortoiseshell butterfly normally feeds upon elms, the small Tortoiseshell upon nettles. Some butterflies of the large Tortoiseshell bred from caterpillars, fed upon nettles, showed a "wonderful resemblance" to the small tortoiseshell. Other instances of a similar nature could be given, but this one is a sufficiently striking example. A number of Arctic and even animals from temperate regions, change to a paler dress on the approach of winter, which change is by some attributed to the alteration in temperature. It may be equally due to the alteration in diet from the same cause.

As a general rule, it seems as if the carnivorous as opposed to the granivorous birds in our isles are the most gaily colored, which points to richness of food as an important factor in the production and maintenance of bright colors. Iron undoubtedly plays a part in producing depth of color, and fanciers of breeds in which depth of color is a desideratum cannot do better than to give a small portion of some form of the powder daily. With buff breeds of poultry the obvious course is to imitate canary breeders if depth of color is desired, unless the fancier goes one better and procures the extracted triolein!

The action of sunlight in tuning white birds yellowish, or, in other words, oxidising pigment which by rights should not be present, is well-known. The selection of birds which are not affected by sunlight would soon produce a strain minus this undesirable attribute; also the addition of carmine to the food will, it is said, turn the yellowish birds white again, but we cannot speak from experience on this head.—Poultry, England.

DORKINGS AS WINTER LAYERS.

Most American poultry books say Dorkings are inferior as layers and only good for table, but from time to time one sees letters in the poultry papers, from the few people who keep them in this country, saying how well they have laid with them and I have found them quite fair winter layers. This winter, having bought a pair of Red Dorkings, I kept an account of the eggs laid by the pullet. My birds were late hatched and consequently small in size, but in spite of this, the pullet began laying on Jan. 15th, laid till Feb. 3rd; only missing two days. It then wanted to sit, and as the weather was too cold to shut it up, it did not begin laying again till March 3rd, when it laid fourteen eggs without missing a day, when it again wanted to sit and I sat it. Though the cold stopped my Rose Combed Rhode Island Reds, it seemed to have no effect on the Dorking, nor did any of the Red pullets lay continuously for more than three days without missing a day.

Lewis Wright's latest book describes Red Dorkings as first rate table fowls, and I believe many people regard them as the best variety of that great table breed, the Dorking. They are said to be quite hardy, but all Dorkings would be easy enough to raise, if people would not keep the long legged,narrow breasted specimens one so often sees. Red, in their case is an abbreviation of Black Breasted Red, I suppose, for the cock is of that color. My pullet is something like a Dark Dorking pullet, except where the Dark would be pale straw color, she is deep yellow, the neck hackle being edged with yellow. Wright's book mentions a good cockerel as weighing 10 lbs., but does not say its age. However, 10 lbs. is large enough for ordinary use, especially in a Dorking, where the weight is made up of delicate meat,instead of coarse bones and useless feathers, and a bird of ten pounds as a cockerel, colored like a Black Breasted Red Game, would be a very showy cock. Their looks, combined with their great table qualities, (and people who have once kept Dorkings, I notice, do not care to eat the coarser breeds), and their fair winter laying, surely make them a fowl worth cultivating. They seem to stand the cold well, for the water often freezes solid in their home, but this never stopped the pullet laying. People write a good deal about the advantages of rose combs for a cold climate, but seem to forget that in real cold, the cock's wattles freeze and most rose combed birds have rather long ones. The breeds whose heads stand the cold best, are Indian Game and crested fowls, but unfortunately people have bred the crests to such an exaggerated size, that the fowls cannot see around them, and are consequently not pleasing as a fanciers' fowl, as it makes them mopy. Sometimes one reads letters from people, who say they have given up single combed breeds on account of the combs freezing when the birds are asleep at night on their perches and the door is closed and shut up for the night in their homes. It must indeed be a wretched home where such a thing happens, and it is cruelty to keep them in such a place. Even in this climate I have never had it happen, and think it must result from a draft, as it would require very great, still cold to freeze a comb. A home where a bird's comb, single or rose, freezes, is not fit for fowls to live in. How would their owners like to live in a house where their ears froze off? But how about out of doors? I do not turn the Dorkings or the other fowls out in bad weather. They do much better scratching amongst litter for grain, and even the turkeys are, I believe, better inside. In fact, I see no reason for turning or letting them out. We do not keep them to see how much cold they can stand, but to get the most eggs and meat, and I doubt whether their being out in all weathers makes them more hardy. Those fowls that roost as best they can and have no house, have not struck me as being remarkable for anything except small size and unproductiveness. The home my Dorkings are in is, I consider, too cold, but it is draftless. They have had no special feeding except that I generally give them waste bread soaked in milk in the morning, and sometimes a little meat and mashed potatoes at noon, corn or wheat at night. They do not seem to care much for cabbage, and get no other green food. This year I am going to try feeding the chicks on pin head oatmeal dry, giving them water or milk to drink. Some people say they cannot raise Dorking chicks, and I fancy the reason is, either they are breeding from unhealthy stock or they do not feed the chicks well enough at first. All quick feathering breeds require high feeding till the feathers are well grown, as it is a great strain on the bird, and I believe the slow feathering of Asiatics accounts for their hardiness. Their absence of feathers also leaves no hiding place for lice. Chickens "going light," of whatever breed they may be, I believe to be due to tuberculosis, brought out by over crowding and under feeding, and sometimes from continued wet weather. Care in selection of stock birds, whether Dorkings or other breeds, and only breeding from mature birds, will greatly do away with it, and chickens from broad breasted, short legged fowls seldom get it. My Red Dorkings are fairly broad breasted and very short legged and what I look upon as of equal importance, the legs are far apart. Width between the legs in any fowl is always a sign of a strong constitution. They are no new breed, having been kept in certain localities in England for many years. Whether there is any Game blood in them I do not know, but their short legs make me thing not. In some of the old English poultry books, the description of Dorkings seems to be these Red birds, that is in books written before the Colored or Dark variety was produced.

BENINGTON'S DEFENSE OF THE ORPINGTON.

Editor American Fancier:—In The American Fancier of March 19, under head of "A Visit to Madison Square Garden Show," I notice that John Rumbold delivers a scandalous tirade on Orpingtons and have thus far looked in vain for a reply from some one who has the capacity to give the opposite side of the question in its proper light. Hence I step into the breach. First I know nothing whatever of Rumbold,except the information that the above mentioned article gives. However, I do know something of Orpingtons and other varieties of fowls; also as I have bred fancy poultry in a small way more than a quarter of a century, and during that period of time I have bred: Silver Spangled, Gold Spangled and Black Hamburgs, Silver Grey Dorkings, B. B. R. Games and Game Bantams, Black Langshans, White and Buff Wyandottes, White and Buff Plymouth Rocks. Five years ago began with S. C. Buff Orpingtons and very soon discarded all otners, for the very simple reason that as a general purpose fowl, both for fancy and utility, I have found them superior to all others. If, as would appear from his article, Mr. R. is giving vent to a personal spite or prejudice, without having had any experience whatever with Orpingtons, I challenge him to a test with any or all of the varieties he mentions, and if the Orpingtons do not sustain their own case then let him blow his horn just as long and loud as he pleases. I have found them to breed as true to type and color as the older varieties. To be more hardy and prolific. Feather quicker, lay longer and in short the fowl that has come to the front simply on its merits quicker than any other has or is likely to. If any one knows of their quality by experience there would be no occasion for writing this article, but for the benefit of those who have no knowledge of them except such as can be obtained from Mr. R. and his narrow vision, I say emphatically try them, for yourselves. This leads us to state that the best and most reliable chick and poultry foods in the country are advertised in these columns, all being used in this vicinity with success. And chicken fanciers in this neck of the woods are well posted on what is what in the feed line.

The poultry business in Johnstown and vicinity is booming. McGuire & Lyke, who handle poultry foods, incubators, brooders and supplies, report over thirty Prairie State incubators sold the past month, besides tons of chick feed of the standard makes. This looks like a revival in the poultry business for keeps.

Even the Adirondack Poultry Club is getting a move on. At a well attended meeting last week it was decided to prepare for another Johnstown show next November, and what that means the real fanciers of America can testify to. This time the show will be held in the opera house, a beautiful building, and suffice it to say the exhibition will be one that will be worthy of the name given to past shows, viz.: "The Fanciers' Show of America."

It may perhaps prove interesting to reprint the following notice from the Poultry World of October, 1873, to show what a hot-bed of poultry this section was thirty years ago:

POULTRY AT FULTON CO., N. Y., FAIR.

At the annual meeting of the Fulton County Agricultural Society, held at Johnstown, September 16th and 17th, a large display of fancy poultry was on exhibition. The principal exhibitors were E. W. Squire, Stuart Henry and James Boshart of Johnstown and Sherwood Haggart of Gloversville. Most of the fowls were well mated for breeding purposes and reflected great credit upon their respective owners. It was the largest poultry show ever held in the county and attracted much attention."

And the poultry at the county fair ever since has been of the finest quality and quantity.

The artistic success of the winter shows in Johnstown is due to the fact that these functions are not money-making schemes; in fact, the cost to run such a show is large, but thanks to the liberality of the members and citizens, a Johnstown show is possible and eminently satisfactory to exhibitors.

A certain chicken crank started hatching eggs in incubators and rearing chickens in brooders. It was his first attempt. He had luck in hatching, but his real troubles began when it came to raising the little feathered bipeds. For a week or two all went well, when a change occurred and the chicks began to droop and die off and none were left. With indignation profound, this disgusted chicken raiser loudly proclaimed that the food he fed was the cause of it, and incidentally caused the trade in that article to take a sudden drop by his intemperate language and wholesale condemnation of its value. The truth of the matter is: The food in question is one of the best on the market and has been successfully used by several large poultry raisers here, but the man with a brooder on his hands was the cause of all the trouble. He coddled his chicks, allowed them to stay on a hot floor (a death trap for growing chicks) and then damned the food. This is one case—but there are others. It seems to us that manufacturers of brooders cannot be emphatic or careful enough when giving instructions regarding the running of brooders. Chickens are not hot-bed candidates; on the contrary, they are hardy and need pure air and can stand quite a low temperature. What they do need is a place to hover when they need warmth after being out of doors, and the heat for such purpose must come from above and not from below. A dry, hot floor dries the oil in the feet and shanks and ends the career of the chicken. Too much heat forces the growth and at the same time neglects the building up of muscular tissue. These are plain facts.

The bill introduced by the Hon. John Orr of Orange, asking for an appropriation of three thousand dollars for New York state poultry exhibitors at the World's Fair was reported as being too late, as all the appropriation bills passed are in the hands of the governor. Had the New York State Poultry Society been a month earlier in making its application, there is not the slightest doubt but what the appropriation would have been granted. It's a case of being "twenty minutes late," to use a modern catch phrase.

To judge by the bouquets that Grant M. Curtis, Geo. E. Bates and Fred L. Kimmey are throwing at each other, the conclusion is forced upon us that it must have been a florists' convention at Rochester, instead of a poultrymen's gathering. But the above mentioned burg is known as the "Flower City," which may explain the horticultural remarks of the aforesaid triumvirate.

We might add, as a matter of history, that some of the hardest and most conscientious work in regard to the publication of the new Standard of Perfection was done by Mr. T. E. Orr, secretary of the American Poultry Association.

The following, clipped from the New York Sun, will no doubt make our associate editor in New York city do a few mental stunts and finally relieve his mind on the egg question. In order to spring it gently, we make no further comments:

Chicago, April 8.—Herbert Emerson of South Water street to-day bought 4,752,000 eggs. He is the "egg king" of Chicago at present, because he gobbled up thirty-three carloads of eggs, practically the entire lot offered for storage, to-day. He paid 16¾ cents a dozen for them.

"This does not constitute anything like a corner," said the secretary of the Butter and Egg Board, "but it's a very big transaction for one firm to swing."

The "Yellow Peril," about which we read so much since the Japs and the Russians have started scrapping, seems to have become a reality in Gotham the other day, to judge by the following excerpt from the New York Sun:

"Ninth avenue was a raw omelet last night between Twentieth and Twenty-first streets. A two-horse truck broke down and spilled 100 crates of eggs and twenty-five tubs of butter. The truck blocked the car tracks for nearly half an hour. Motormen and conductors got all over egg trying to move the truck away. A policeman slipped on egg and sat down in butter. Finally a wrecking crew from the railway stables cleared the road."

On April 26, 1904, at Long Branch, N. J., Miss Margaret Cecilia Hennessy will be married to Mr. Charles Jehl. Mr. Jehl is the secretary of the Nationad Bantam Association and was the first subscriber to The American Fancier, when it was established in 1893. BREEDING, CARE AND MANAGEMENT OF BUFF COCHIN BANTAMS.

By Ernest E. Ford.

First, great care should be exercised in obtaining good,vigorous stock. Some, however, prefer buying eggs, but we think it much safer, and that better results will follow, if a pair, trio, or pen is purchased from some good, reliable breeder. In mating Cochin Bants., a male of light, even, golden shade, mated to females of his own shade, produces better males than females, the females being a trifle too light. A male of a darker shade mated to females of a light golden shade, produces fine color in females, the males being entirely too dark. But we consider a happy medium, being the proper mating: Male, good Cochin shape golden buff, with strong undercolor, mated with females of a medium golden buff. This mating will produce better results in both males and females. From six to eight females being about the proper number for one male bird. May and June are the best months in which to hatch Bantams, although July is good. Eggs can be set under either Bantam hens or larger hens, or, better still, in an incubator. Bantam hens make the best of mothers. One of the greatest pests in rearing Bantams is lice. You must keep them free from lice. The lice being the same as on larger chicks, Bantams, being smaller, will succumb quicker. Use some good lice killer,and put lard or vaseline on their heads and under the wings. For the first ten days after hatching, feed bread crumbs, hard boiled eggs, oat meal. After this feed them a variety of good dry food. We find H. O. chick food fills the bill all O. K. Keep clean water before your chicks all the time. Give plenty of grit, and a little green bone occasionally. Our Bantams are given free range for the first eight weeks, and then they are confined in small, shady grass runs, giving them at all times plenty of green food. In our experience when Bantams are given free range, they grow too large and legs grow too long. To starve them to keep them small is a wrong idea, as they will be small, puny birds and no good whatever to breed from or as a show specimen. Give them plenty to eat, keep them growing, and keep them always in good, dry, clean quarters. Don't cull too early, as some of the most ungainly cochins mature in the best shaped and colored birds.

PRACTICAL POINTERS

By Geo. E. Howell.

Mr. Howell, associate editor of The American Fancier, will furnish weekly reports on the egg and poultry market, and answer all questions submitted to him relating to commercial and practical poultry keeping. When replies are requested to be sent by letter, stamps must be enclosed and letters addressed to George E. Howell, 70 Christopher St., New York City.

Eggs.—The receipts for the week averaged 15,000 cases a day, during the first four days the market was at a standstill, and little doing. At the close things were looking brighter and prices were advanced ½c. over early quotations, the closing price being for fancy nearly white, 19½c.; others, 18 to 18½; western and Kentucky, 18c; other Southern, best, 17½c. Ducks' eggs, 22 to 26 as to quality; goose eggs, 45c per dozen.

Poultry.—Receipts, 44 cars, live, and 9,000 packages, nearly dressed, fowls comprising the principal shipments, and selling readily at 15c per lb.; chickens 13, ducks 90c a pair, turkeys 15c a lb.

Dressed poultry, mostly frozen, chicken, 13 to 14. Fowls as they run, 14 to 14½; best squabs, $3.00 per dozen. Broilers, fancy, 3 lb. and under per pair, 35 to 40c. a lb. Over 3 lbs., 25 to 30c. Turkeys, 19c lb. for fancy offerings.

In taking a concrete view of the poultry industry of to-day, one can but remark the ever increasing tendency toward the bread and butter breeds all over the world.

Without doubt the most popular breed of fowls in England to-day is the Orpington. Little did one think the result of a triple cross of twenty years since, and now being boomed in this country by the Cookes, would be given the prominence it enjoys to-day. Yet when one stops to consider that cross-breeding is common in England, and carried on to the extent of advertising the eggs and chicks from such crosses, the wonder is that cases of this kind are so rare.

What kind of a reception would a breeder in America receive, if he should offer eggs for hatching from cross-mated stock? It would be the merry ha ha, and back, back to the beyond for his.

The English people are a substantial people. Every variety under the breeding has a more rugged individuality than in other countries, that is, coarser frames.

Much of the merit possessed by the Orpington as a bread and butter breed can be traced to its Yankee ancestor,the Plymouth Rock, also quite popular in England. Next in prominence, if not dividing the honors, comes the pet of the American Utilitarian, and another pronounced bread and butter breed, is the Wyandotte family. To give the Briton his due, he has helped us to perfect the Wyandotte plumage, but sadly mangled the shape.

In Denmark they have the Danish Co-operative Egg Export Society, the last report of this society on record places their business at 5,000,000 dozen of eggs a year. We used a little more co-operation in this country.

The question propounded to me in regard to next winter's supply of eggs and the moulting of the fowls, appearing in these notes, shows the trend of the public mind is toward winter eggs and high prices.

If any brother can shed light on the subject, let him tell us what he knows, co-operation and mutual enlightenment is the bane of the business.

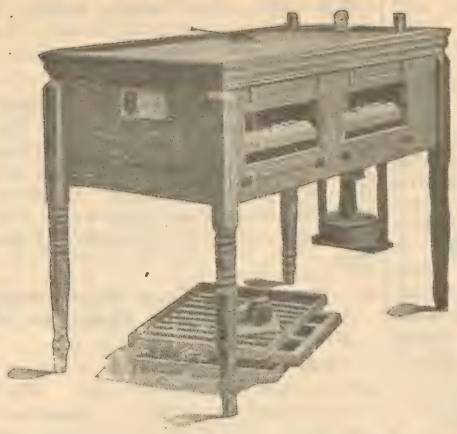
About the best thing Farm-Poultry ever said, is where it asks: "Why doesn't the R. N. Y. hen man make an experiment of crowding 200 hens in a building 20x20,as advocated by him? He has the hens." Rather pointed, and brings the sage of Maple Dale face to face with one of his own theories, where he himself admits he must demonstrate satisfactorily, or stop the leakage of hot air.

We have no desire to butt in. Mapes is on the ground, and has the hens. A little radical, if not reckless in some of the theories he advances, his efforts through the columns of the Rural have done much for egg production.

Whether it is advisable to house even 100 hens in company, is a question that, in a debate, would be decided in the negative, and could only be accomplished successfully where ample shed room and a range was attached; to say that 200 hens could be housed in such space, without other freedom, would invite disaster. If one expects to colonize over an area of ground, place a shed at one end, and a hedge or windbrake at the other, the thing could be done at one-half the expense of a divided house and runs, and insure a warm house to roost in, and comfortable quarters on cold and stormy days, which if coupled with the right kind of handling, must result in a good supply of eggs.

In a recent issue Mr. Mapes says: "The food cost of a Minorca egg is greater than the food cost of a Leghorn." As an egg machine he says the Leghorn does her work on less food. Just so. A type of engine traveling sixty miles an hour, and consuming only two-thirds as much coal as required by another type to perform the same work, is the one that will get the precedence every time.

If the Leghorn diverts less food to her power department, and puts more eggs in the basket, that is the hen to keep as an egg machine. That the carcass is of little value matters not. In the case of the engines referred to, when purchased no account of their value as scrap iron is taken into consideration.



QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Please tell me how to get chickens to moulting early, as I want my birds feathered up well before winter comes; then I can ship a good supply of eggs that will bring the top price.

Here evidently is a brother waking up to the fact that the money lies in high prices, that is, all the extra eggs he gets while prices are high is so much velvet.

It is also a fact that a hen moulting early will lay in the fall and early winter; a well conditioned hen will be more prone to moult and moult quickly than a half-fed one. A little sulphur in the soft feed on dry days during the moulting season is a help. When fall comes place the matured pullets and hens that have finished moulting together, and feed for eggs.

As well to go to a dry well for water, as to a flock of immatured and half moulted fowls for eggs.

R. F. A., Deposit N. Y.: I think I can beat that Wyandotte report a little. I let friends have a good many eggs, and as you say, it is handy to go in their yards and pick out an extra bird, that you know is raised from eggs out of your best stock. (Nothing made in this world by being selfish).

One started in this way had two Silver Wyandotte hens and 11 pullets. From the 13 she got 218 eggs during February and the thermometer down to 34 below at times. These pullets were late hatched and did better in March. They had no meat, think they would have done better with some, but guess few flocks have done as well. I know lots of farmers with large flocks that got no eggs to speak of all winter

I also started a friend here with Golden Wyandottes, gave him eggs for a few years. He now has some good ones. He keeps them on a lot back of our shop, so I have a chance to know what they do. This party lost his coop in a flood last October, together with several fine birds. He had only an open shed for them to roost in all winter, but he takes extra care with them as regards feed, etc., and the shed is large, but all open toward the east, not a curtain even in it. He got a nice lot of eggs from them all winter, even in the coldest weather, and a healthier, more vigorous flock you never saw. I don't know how many eggs they laid, but a good, fair average and steadily too. It knocks out lots of the old ideas of hot houses for winter eggs. It's not so much a question of "Variety," as it is of how bred and how fed.

Well, brother, 218 eggs in a short month from 13 head not in the best condition, and thermometer at 34 below is doing pretty well. It is hard to estimate what they would have done had they been in condition. Your record certainly beats the other fellow, and shows the Wyandottes to be a versatile breed, escaping a Delaware river flood and defying Jack Frost to break a record.

LESSONS ON THE FEEDING OF LAYING HENS.

By James E. Rice,
Prof. of Poultry at Cornell University.

This lesson aims to discuss principles that may be applied to different conditions. It does not presume to lay down laws that must be followed rigidly. The lesson is only the opinion of one person about the natural laws governing egg production. Others may have interpreted the laws differently. It is only by a free expression of opinion and a comparison of ideas that we can arrive at the truth. This lesson will have failed in its mission if it does not stimulate the reader to independence of thought and action, and help him to decide for himself the best method to follow in his own case. Until many feeding experiments have been carried on that shall give to us accurate data, from which we can establish principles, poultry feeding must continue to be largely a question of method based on opinions, rather than a definite science.

1. Profitable Egg Production Depens on Three Factors,—Good Hens, Congenial Surroundings, and Suitable Food.

(1) Good hens. This implies an inborn tendency to lay, and great vitality to withstand the heavy drain on the system.

(2) Surroundings that are congenial. This has to do, first, with physical comfort as provided by a warm, clean, roomy house, with an abundance of pure air and sunshine, and a place to wallow; second, with contentment which is induced by providing a place free from disturbing influences. To lay well a hen must, first of all, be made to feel at home. Reproduction is based upon a higher law than merely a satisfied stomach. Unless hens feel "happy" no amount of good feeding will induce them to lay. It is because of this law of contentment that many flocks of hens, feeling the privacy, safety and freedom of their unpretentious home, are producing eggs abundantly in the dead of winter, on simple but wholesome food; while many flocks kept in expensive houses and fed most elaborate rations are practically unproductive.

(3) An abundance of the food best suited to produce the greatest vigor of the reproductive system. This applies more especially to hens kept in the best possible health. Other conditions favorable, suitable food, properly fed, has much to do with egg production.

2. The Kind of Food Determines, to a Large Extent, the Character of the Product.

This is true whether it be in the production of meat or eggs. We must realize that the egg is a manufactured product; that it is made from food by a wonderfully delicate process of digestion and secretion, and for this reason there must be a close relationship between the food consumed and the product desired. This is found by chemical investigation to be true. Notice the similarity in composition between the raw materials, the food and the finished product—the fowl and the egg.

If we examine the body of a hen we find fat, lean meat and bone. If we examine the food that she eats, we discover, in wheat for example, that it contains starch and oil (the carbohydrates or fat-forming material), which is the fat of the grain and which, when eaten by the animal, goes to make heat, energy and fat. We see also little grains of gluten, which might be called the lean of the grain and which, when utilized by the animal, makes the lean meat. We further find the mineral matter (the ash), which might be called the bone of the wheat and which, when assimilated by the animal, makes bone and egg shell. Therefore it is easy to understand why it is that when food is deficient in lime and other mineral matter, the eggs are soft shelled; why a ration deficient in protein produces weak, spindling chickens, or a ration containing an excess of easily digestible carbohydrate matter causes the fowl to become excessively fat. Thus we see the necessity of having properly balanced relationship between the food nutrients in the ration, in order to produce a perfect animal or a perfect egg. Is it any wonder, then, that a hen whose body contains 21 per cent of protein, and whose egg contains more than 11 per cent of the same nutrient, will fail to grow well or to lay satisfactorily when her food is deficient in this particular material, or any other that her body requires? With this thought in mind, observe the wide variation in the

A Hatching .. Wonder ..

The new "CYCLE" Hatcher. The perfected result of the latest discoveries in artificial incubation. A wonder of the 20th century. An entirely original and novel method of hatching and brooding chicks. It requires only the self-supplied moisture of the egg itself. No egg tray doors to open. Regulation automatic and scientifically exact. Holds from 50 to 10,000 and can be set when started with 50 or more eggs per day until its capacity is complete, making unnecessary to fill entire machine at starting. Eggs cooled without removal from machine. Will hatch hens, ducks, geese, or turkey eggs equally well and at the same time. Made entirely of metal and asbestos; fire-proof and will not warp, swell, shrink or crack.

A hen never hatches better or stronger chickens than when setting on the ground, in which event the underside of the eggs are cooler than the upper surface, and the "Cycle Hatcher" is the only machine built following closely the natural laws of incubation covering this very essential point, as well as many others.

When the fresh air enters the machine near the center tube it carries with it the moisture it naturally contains. On becoming heated it rapidly expands as it is carried along the heated surface, and because the upper metal of the egg chamber is still warmer than the incoming air, the moisture is carried along until it reaches a cooler surface, where it condenses, leaving the dry air to rise again to be forced out in waves by the rapidly expanding air above.

It would be impossible to get the same results from a wooden machine or one made from any other absorbing material. In the Cycle the only thing that can absorb moisture is the asbestos felt directly under the eggs, where it should be, which never becomes absolutely dry during the process of incubation.

50 egg size only $5.00. Full particulars promptly furnished on application.

* Two analyses are given to show how variable meat foods are.

amounts of ash, protein and carbohydrates in the analyses of common poultry food stuffs, which are given in the following tables:

3. There is no One Best Ration for Egg Production.

This is because so little is positively known as to just what constitutes the best balanced ration for any particular flock, and because there seems good reason for believing that what would be the most profitable ration for one breed, may not be for other breeds; or that the best ration for a flock in very cold quarters may not be equally satisfactory for the same flock kept in a very warm house; or that the best ration for old fowls may not be the one best suited to young stock of the same breed. Therefore, the most that we can do at present is to understand thoroughly the composition of the various foods, and to note those that are exceptionally rich or deficient in ash, protein and carbohydrates. That we can make up rations which the fowls like, having in mind the price at which the foods can be bought, and add to them, or subtract from the, the foods rich in protein (muscle-makers), or the foods rich in carbohydrates (fat formers), or those rich in the mineral nutrient, (shell and bone makers), to suit the needs and conditions of any particular flock.

4 A Hen which is in the Best Laying Condition has Some Surplus Fat in her Body.

This means that her bodily wants have been supplied, and there is some food to spare. She has surplus energy. A very fat hen seldom lays well. A poor hen cannot lay well. The first part of the egg to be formed is the yolk, which contains 30 per cent of albumen (a form of protein), and 64 per cent of fat. Food is first used to maintain the body. New growth and production generally come from the surplus, after the bodily wants have been satisfied. Therefore new eggs will not develop until there is surplus fat to form the yolk. The very fat hen usually does not lay because her condition has become one of debility, and because her tissues are weak and flabby.

5 Fowls are Naturally Grain Eaters.

A large part of their food, therefore, should be cereals. Note the wide variation in the composition of various grains, each one of which has its own peculiar flavors and value. Corn is an excellent grain. It is, perhaps, the grain most relished by fowls. Therein lies the danger. Fowls eat it so greedily that, it being a fattening food, they are likely to become overfat, if it is fed too freely. Wheat is perhaps the best grain for poultry, and its by-products are among the safest and most satisfactory of foods. Heavy oats are perhaps next in value. Light oats are a delusion. Oat shucks that make up about 35 per cent to 40 per cent of the total weight of light oats, are the richest, and one of the best of poultry foods. Barley is excellent. Buckwheat is fattening and usually expensive; therefore it should be fed sparingly and, as a rule, only in the winter season.

6. Hens are Naturally Meat Lovers.

They are naturally worm and insect hunters. They must have meat in some form, and much of it, in order to do their best. This is not only abundantly shown in practice, but it has

HAILED WITH DELIGHT.

Conditions having arisen that made the transfer of the American Fancier from Johnstown, N. Y., to Indianapolis, Ind., impossible, the paper has been taken back to Johnstown and will as heretofore be published at that place by J. H. Drevenstedt, its founder and editor. It was our opinion all along that Drev. made a mistake when he sold the Fancier; but that was his business, not ours. Poultrymen generally are hailing with delight the news that he has taken the paper back, and we are glad to join them in their expressions of pleasure. May the eagle continue to spread his wings and the Fancier continue to flourish.—Commercial Poultry.

SAYING SOME.

J. H. Drevenstedt has taken back the American Fancier and it will be published at Johnstown, New York, as of old. We could not do without Drevy, and every one of his readers will be glad to see him back. George E. Howell has been secured as associate editor and we can expect a better paper than ever and that is saying "some"—Pacific Poultryman.

ALWAYS BRIGHT AND NEWSY.

The American Fancier journeyed west for a few weeks, but the climate did not agree with its constitution, and so it is back again at its old home, Johnstown, N. Y., and under its old management, J. H. Drevenstedt. The mission of the weekly is poultry news, news first, last and all the time. The excellent monthlies cover the other ground completely. The American Fancier has always been bright and newsy, and here its popularity lay. It has a big field, and one that we gladly see is to be greatly extended. No exhibitor can do without it; it is one round dollar per year, and now is the time to subscribe. —Canadian Poultry Review.

STRICTLY A FANCIER'S PAPER.

Editor American Fancier:

We have just sold to Mr. Chas. May of Chicora, Pa., two Black Red Game pullets at a price consistent with quality, Mr. May having read our ad in "Fancier," the 2d N. Y. pullet being one of the pair. I must say that your paper is a strictly fancier's paper, and am more than pleased to note reissue of it from the old stand.

Very truly yours,
W. H. MUDGE & SON.

Horace Havemeyer, - Stamford, Conn.

IT'S A CINCH

to breed the BUFF WYANDOTTE winners if one has the right kind of stock, SUITABLY MATED. It's one thing to secure individuality, but to reproduce or BREED ON, it's absolutely necessary that a specimen's ancestry for A TERM OF YEARS be of the very best of it's time. "Like begets like," OR LIKE ITS ANCESTRY—more often perhaps the latter. What does prove a success from a breeder's standpoint is INDIVIDUALITY BACKED UP WITH A RICH INHERITANCE of first prize winners for many generations. So far, doubtless you agree with me. Now, where better can you find the desired NICKING qualities than from a strain that has been successfully maintained before the public since the origin of the breed?

For FIVE YEARS IN SUCCESSION we have won at New York or Boston THREE OF THE FIRST PRIZES; one year winning ALL THE FIVE FIRSTS AT NEW YORK; another year ALL FIRSTS AT BOSTON, save on pen; each year winning MORE FIRSTS THAN ALL COMPETITORS COMBINED . . . . . .

We have birds for sale that descend straight from these first prize winners. Past years matings were headed by such males as follows: 1-3-5 COCKS, 2 and 3 OPEN CLASS, and 1 and 2 PEN COCKERELS, BOSTON, 1903, also the sires of the four mentioned cockerels, Talk about male producing strains, WHERE IS ITS EQUAL? We don't charge any more for OUR KIND than those claimed to be (?) just as good. Write us for anything you want.
We shall sell eggs at $3.00 per thirteen straight, We are now preparing a circular giving our method of mating which has proven so successful. It is free to those who send for it. Egg orders booked now for future delivery, insuring shipment when wanted. (Send for Catalogue.)

BARRED AND BUFF ROCKS.

I have won the past season at the following shows: Fitchburg, Mass., Stamford, Conn., South Framingham, Mass., Manchester, N. H., New Bedford, Mass. The above Barred Cockerels were all sired by 3d cockerel. 1903, Madison Square Garden, New York winner, 63 cockerels in this class. Reliable Poultry Journal February, 1903, liked this cockerel above all others in the show. I have a few cockerels sired by above cockerel for sale from $4.00 upwards. Standard weight of very even color, barred well all over. If you want to improve your blood these cockerels are what you want. Money returned if birds don't suit you. I have had my pens mated up by one of the leading Poultry Judges in America—4 pens headed by high scoring cockerels. I have also one pen of Buff Rocks. For the cockerel in this pen and two pullets I gave Mr. Higgins, of Orange, Mass., $75. I have not many sittings to dispose of therefore have your orders booked early. My eggs will be from same pens as I breed from myself. Choicest Eggs $2.00 a sitting.

OF INTEREST TO POULTRYMEN

We wish to call the attention of every reader of this article who is interested in poultry to the "American Poultryman's Desk-Book, Directory and Buying Guide," published by the "Poultry Publishing Co., Sta. B-5, Toledo, Ohio." This directory will be large and complete, (10,000 copies), and will be used by the largest breeders of poultry and leading manufacturers of incubators and poultry supplies as a mailing list. It is, therefore, bound to prove of extraordinary value to those whose names appear in it, and to advertisers therein.

Send 10c silver and 2c stamp and your name and address will appear in it. For 15c (coin) and stamp your name will appear in heavy type. A copy will be mailed to each subscriber. Send to-day as the directory is about to go to press, and all names should be in promptly to appear in the coming issue. Persons wishing advertising space will do well to write at once, as they are making a special 30-day offer. eow 54tf

FLUFFS.

New and Distinct Varieties of Fowl With Silky Plumage.

BY F. J. REVELEY.
Secretary National Fluff Club of America.

If any one desires to keep a few fowls and is undecided what breed to select, the Fluffs are a ready answer to his or her indecision. Surely no breed is more handsome, more profitable or more easily cared for in all climates or seasons than they are. Their plumage is better described by the word fleece than feathers, and this peculiarity makes it impossible for them to fly over a two-foot fence. They have plump bodies, yellow skin and legs, making them a very desirable fowl for market or table, and as for laying eggs in winter, no breed can compare with them. They are quiet and contented in disposition, singing and earning money all the year round. One flock of twenty, with only ordinary care and housing, averaging over 150 eggs per hen for the year, shows what the possibilities are for this really wonderful breed. Their plumage is equal to live duck and geese feathers for beds, pillows, etc., quite an item when turned into cash. Having been bred to the three colors, white, golden and black, there is variety enough for the most critical fancier, and one of the most remarkable traits of the breed, is the large percentage of high class specimens hatched from each setting of eggs, and although they are not over-broody, the hens are most excellent mothers, and very often will commence laying again before their brood is a month old. To the poultry man who has not yet found his ideal, after having tried many varieties, I would say, give the Fluffs your next attention, and you will find in them a combination of all the qualities you have been looking for in other breeds. I have received more eggs from my pen of White Fluffs the past winter, than I did from twice the number in another pen of a much advertised "heavy laying breed," and the eggs are of good color and size. All the Fluffs need to demonstrate their excellence is a chance, and any one giving them a trial will surely be pleased with the result of the investment, as any member of the National Fluff Club of America can tell you. They are to be admitted to the St. Louis Exposition, and have more right to the American Standard than some already admitted.

WHITE LEGHORN WINNERS.

THE NEST.

I have just been reading an article by W. Cook, on "The Nest." I will try and tell you about the nest I like best. I don't just agree with Mr. Cook on the shape of nest. In the first place, if a hen steals her nest, as we call it, if it is on the ground it will be hard, and slightly hollowed, and this will allow the breastbone to rest easy. If on a board bottom she will endeavor to put some kind of litter all around her, especially on the edges or under her sides, so as to raise her slightly and prevent the breast bone from resting too hard on the nest. There may be only one right way to make a nest, but I have seen a great many different shaped nests made by hens, and man also. I will give a description of my favorite nest: If I can get an old cheese box hoop about 12 inches in diameter, so much the better; if not, I take a strip of sheet iron 4 inches wide and about 38 or 39 inches long, roll it up round and lock or rivet it together. And take some strips of old carpet or cloth about 2 inches wide and wind all around the hoop, lapping each time it comes around. This covers the hoop inside and outside. Now I take a box 2 or 3 inches larger and higher than the hoop and put in about one inch of loam in the box and even it all over and stamp it down hard, and put on some fine litter or chaff, and press the hoop down hard on this litter, keeping the hoop in the center of the box and fill in all around this box with dirt up to top of hoop. This holds the hoop in place. Be sure and have the front of box where the hen walks in on a level with the top of hoop. This is necessary, because when the hen walks in she will walk in on a level with the nest and will not break any eggs. You are all ready now to put in the eggs. You can put in more eggs in this kind of nest than any kind I ever saw, and when the hen steps into the nest the egg will spread and prevent any from breaking. In warm weather I use dirt only, as it is more cooling. Now if you never saw a hen spread for all she is worth you will in this kind of a nest. And after a few days you will notice the hen will work a hollow in the center of the nest so as to let the breast bone rest easy. Another good feature about this nest is, when the chicks begin to hatch, they can get away from the unhatched egg and prevent crushing them. Don't think that the larger the hen the larger the box. Not so. This size is plenty large enough for the largest hen. Another good feature in this nest: the hen can turn at any point of compass and rest easy. Give this size and style a trial, and you will like it. Mr. Cook speaks of a hen that steals her nest usually gives best results. I know this is an old cry. But to look at it in this way, when a hen steals her nest she usually goes by herself and lays every egg in that nest. And they are near of a size and vitality, and this is where the secret comes in, for she will hatch nearly every egg about even and will stay on the nest until she does. Don't think that because she steals away from molestation is what makes them hatch, for it is that even vitality that does the business.

Hope Valley, R. I.

LESSONS ON THE FEEDING OF LAYING HENS.

By James E. Rice,
Prof. of Poultry at Cornell University.

been proved by experiment. Undoubtedly the best meat food is fresh meat. Hens prefer it cooked; it also keeps longer and is more easily fed than in the raw state. Green cut bone is excellent. The handiest meat food, particularly for summer, is meat scraps and meat meal, many brands of which are on the market. Observe in the tables the great variation in the composition of meat products.

It is well to buy only on a guaranteed analysis. It is safe to feed in an egg ration one-tenth to one-fifth by weight of meat in the total ration, the quantity varying with the richness of the meat and other foods used. I prefer to mix the meat in the meal feed. It is, however, fed separate with perhaps equally good results.

Skim milk is a valuable source of animal protein, and should be fed liberally, if possible, not only to moisten the mash, but it may also be placed where the fowls may drink it.

In order to make a comparison between the various meat foods, based on the food value as shown by chemical analysis, and considering only the protein, the following figures are given:

If meat scraps, containing 60 per cent of protein, can be bought for $45.00 per ton, then meat meal containing 30 per cent of protein would be worth $22.50 per ton; green cut bone, which contains 14 per cent of protein would be worth $2.60 per ton; and skim milk, which contains 3 5-10 per cent of protein would be worth $2.60 per ton. It is very likely that the protein in skim milk would be a little more digestible, and that green cut bone, if fresh, might possibly be more palatable than either the meat scraps or the meat meal. The various meat products would have varying amounts of mineral matter and carbohydrate material, which has not been considered in this comparison.

7. Even Hay is Relished by a Busy Hen.

Fresh made clover or alfalfa hay or clover meal, mixed in the mash and scalded, is much enjoyed by poultry, and is profitable for food. It adds bulk to the ration, makes variety, supplies valuable nutrients, particularly protein and mineral matter, and therefore saves the buying of grain. The second growth of clover is to be preferred, because it has a larger proportion of leaf and seed and less woody fiber than the first growth. It will be seen from the analysis given that, ton for ton, clover hay contains a little more mineral matter, more than half as much protein and about one-third more carbohydrates than wheat bran.

8. Vegetable Foods are Desirable.

The great value of green food lies in its ability to aid in the digestion of other foods, thereby promoting good health, which means more eggs. For summer feeding, clovers and rape are among the best green foods. They should be provided in unlimited quantity. For winter feeding, cabbage and mangel beets are perhaps the best for feeding raw, but for cooking I prefer turnips and small potatoes. No objection has ever arisen on account of the flavor of flesh or eggs from feeding any of these foods liberally.

9. Water is a Necessity for all Fowls.

More than 65 per cent of every egg is water. Water also makes up 55 per cent of the hen's body. Unless a hen has water she cannot make eggs, nor can she properly digest her food. True, all foods contain some water. Vegetables contain a great deal (See table), but all these sources will not be sufficient to more than supply the bodily wants. Much water is used in digesting the food and much passes off in breathing. Many a hen that is otherwise well fed fails to lay because she is compelled to go without water, or to accept the alternative—to suck it out of the snow bank. When laying freely, a flock of 50 hens will drink from 4 to 8 quarts of water each day.

The richer the food is in protein, the more water fowls will drink, because it is required in digestion. The warmer the weather, the more water they require, because more is thrown off the body. The more eggs that are laid, the more water is consumed, because it is needed in their manufacture.

10. Grit for Grinding must be Supplied.

Grit enables the gizzard to prepare the food for digestion. It is a fowl's false teeth. When grit becomes worn out, it is expelled. If new, sharp material cannot be secured, the food must remain underground in the gizzard until it is softened and falls to pieces. This makes slow, imperfect digestion. The hardest grit is best. Always keep it before the fowls.

Fowls do not really begin to satisfy their hunger until the food has been ground and expelled by the gizzard. Fowls have been known to starve to death with a crop full of food, merely because it could not pass to the gizzard, and thence on to be digested.

11. Laying Hens Require an Extra Supply of Mineral Matter.

They need more lime than is furnished in the ordinary ration. Observe the great difference in the amounts of ash in the different foods (See table). Wheat bran, clover and turnips are particularly rich in mineral matter. When the ration lacks mineral matter the egg shells are tender. Hens then become ravenously hungry for lime. They begin to eat their eggs to get more lime for making more egg shells. Lack of mineral matter in the food it the principal reason why hens eat eggs. Cracked oyster shells, mortar, bone, etc., should be accessible to fowls at all times. About 8.5 per cent of the egg is shell. A hen, therefore, that lays 150 eggs per year, would require for the egg shell alone over 1½ lbs. of mineral matter.

12. All Animals prefer a Variety of Food. The Hen is no Exception.

This is natural. A person soon times of even the best food in steady diet. The extent to which an animal relishes its ration has much to do with digestion. A variety of grain also gives individuals in the flock an opportunity, in a measure, to gratify a natural desire to eat the food that they prefer. Whether the different grains will give better results fed mixed, or separately, is a disputed point. Very likely it makes little difference so long as the fowls get them. Try to find out this for yourself. I feed the grain mixed, but vary the proportion and kind from time to time. Avoid sudden, radical changes.

13. Hens have Notions about Food which should be Respected.

Some kinds of grain do not seem to be relished by fowls. This is wholly unaccounted for by the food content. It seems to be due to peculiarities of flavor, color, size or texture. Wheat, for instance, is one of the grains most relished. Rye, on the other hand, though very similar to wheat in composition, is unattractive to them. Habit sometimes has much to do with the fowls' choice of grain. Hens are reluctant about eating thinks new to them. If they have been unaccustomed to any kind of grain they are likely to reject it at first. Even corn and wheat may be refused at first if fowls have never before seen these grains.

14. Exercise produces Warmth, provides Pleasure and promotes Health.

Therefore it is well to let the hens hunt in a deep litter of straw for all their grain. Hens love to scratch. They do it intuitively. Little chickens, one day old, placed on a bare table and fed, will eat and scratch as naturally as old fowls. The happiest hen on the farm is the one in the flower bed with a litter of chickens. Undoubtedly hens that are kept busy eat a little more food. Exercise consumes energy, and energy is power, transformed from the heat that comes from food burned in the body. But what is a little extra food, if thereby we secure healthier fowls and more eggs?

15. How much to Feed Fowls is as Important as What to Feed.

The only rule for feeding is the rule of appetite. Keep the appetite good. To do this is the fine art of feeding. It cannot be taught; it must be learned by practice. Fowls do not eat the same amount of food each day. Those that are laying eat far more than fowls of the same age and breed not laying. Pullets not laying eat more than the same weight of old hens not laying. Some breeds eat more than others, all other conditions being equal. Moreover, individuals of the same variety and age differ in their capacity to consume food. Therefore, hens cannot be fed by rule of weight or measure. My plan is to give a light feeding of mixed grain early in the morning in litter; to feed at noon a warm, soft mash which will be eaten within a few minutes; and at night to scatter as much mixed grain as they can possibly eat. Hens should go to roost with their crops full. If they do not come to meet you, it shows that they are not hungry. The hen's affection for man is mostly in her stomach. If the hens are not hungry, feed lightly, or not at all. There is as much danger from over-feeding as from under-feeding. The latter error, however, is more common.

16. Fowls Digest Ground Food more Readily than Whole Grain.

Whether it pays to feed ground food will depend on the nature of the ration. The whole question is one of rapidity of assimilation,—that is to say, it is a question of an available supply of the digestible nutrients required to make eggs rapidly, and to maintain the body in health. If too much time and energy are required to grind the food, egg production will be retarded. If too much digestible food be given, hens will be stimulated to an unnatural egg yield, which may result in debility and eventually less eggs. It is well, therefore, in feeding ground food to make it bulky,—to feed it in a crumbly condition, never sloppy. The spongy texture enables the stomach juices thoroughly to permeate the mass, and compels some action of the gizzard before it passes into the intestines for digestion.

The time to feed the hot mash is of less importance than the kind to feed, the amount to give and the regularity with which it is fed. My practice is to feed it at noon; first, because it is more convenient than at any other time of the day; second, because I like to get the fowls at work hunting for fine grain in the litter in the morning; third, because I like the fowls to go to roost with crops full of hard grain that will not be digested too quickly. The gizzard of the fowl works by involuntary muscles and works while she sleeps, keeping up the bodily activity.

PRACTICAL POINTERS

By Geo. E. Howell.

Mr. Howell, associate editor of The American Fancier, will furnish weekly reports on the egg and poultry market, and answer all questions submitted to him relating to commercial and practical poultry keeping. When replies are requested to be sent by letter, stamps must be enclosed and letters addressed to George E. Howell, 70 Christopher St., New York City.

Eggs.—Offerings for week approached 125,000 cases, and prices have had their ups and downs,closing at 19 to 20c for nearby fancy white stock. Western eggs, good enough to store, 18½c.; southern, 17½ to 17¾c. per dozen. Ducks' eggs, 25c.; geese, 40c. per dozen.

The continued firmness of the market should be very gratifying to egg producers, in comparing present prices with those of other years, I find last year at this time, N. Y. state eggs were commanding 17½c. per dozen, 18c in 1902 and 15c in 1901.

That the shipper controls the present market was ascertained last Tuesday. The receipts were 35,000 cases and the market declined a cent, withdrawals for storage followed, and up goes the price.

Poultry.—Receipts for week, 38 car loads live and 6,500 pkgs. dressed. Live fowls are quoted at 14c, dressed 13 to 13½, with choice marks bringing 14c.

Chicken 13c, fancy dressed roasters up to 17c, pigeons doing a little better, selling at $2.50 to $3.25 per dozen. Turkeys, dressed, 16 to 19c.; capons, 18 to 20; ducks, 20 per lb; fancy Phila. Broilers, 35 to 40c. lb.

It is an old saying, "seeing is believing," but it seems not always in the egg business. To-day we had for a customer, a portly German lady from the country, on a visit to some of her last summer's boarders, wishing to bring them "some fresh eggs from the farm," and not caring to burden herself with them during the journey, she bethought herself to buy two dozen from me, to present to her patron of the good old summer time, who will probably be telling her neighbors about those eggs right from the country, for weeks to come.

Here is another. In walks an epicurian crank, who opens the ball thus: "I have bought eggs from about everybody in this neighborhood and the yolks are all so pale I won't eat them. Now I am going to try yours and if they are the same it is all off with the eggs for mine." Having been forewarned, ye crank becomes simply pie. Result, wife comes and brags of the eggs, crank tickled to death and buys double the amount.

The Maine Agricultural Experiment station in Bulletin 100 on Poultry Management, gives a balanced ration that I rather like. A pen of 22 head receives early in the morning, 1 pint wheat; at 9:30, ½ pint oats; at 1 p. m., ½ pint cracked corn; at 3 p. m. in the winter and 4 p. m. in the summer, they are given all the mash they will eat up clean in one half hour. The mash is made up of the following mixture: 100 lbs. cornmeal, 200 lbs. wheat bran, 100 lbs. wheat middlings, 100 lbs. linseed meal, 100 lbs. gluten meal, and 100 lbs. beef scraps. To this is added one-fourth of its bulk of cut clover steamed for four hours. Feeding the mash at night, instead of in the morning,and making them work all day long for the other parts of the ration, has been the means of overcoming the fatty tendency so prominent in the heavier breeds, they say further, cracked bone, oyster shells, charcoal and water is before them at all times, and roots are fed in winter every day in the five years this has been followed, very few soft shelled eggs have been laid, and none eaten by the fowls.

The farmers in certain portions of New York state are suffering from too much game protection.

The Pheasants imported into this country to stock game preserves, are spreading over the wooded portion of the state, killing the partridge and other game birds which were to be found formerly in these places; being protected by a heavy fine, the Pheasant is not molested; for this reason they have become so bold, that in some instances the males mingle with the poultry and fight and and harass them at every opportunity.

Sport is one thing, but making a living is an entirely different matter, and all should have the right to protect their property without let or hindrance.

Down here the sports are occasionally caught indulging in the ancient pastime of cock fighting, thereby lowering the moral standard of game breeding. There are hundreds of Game fanciers who breed them from a fanciers' standpoint, and to them it would be a serious blow, should the practice of dubbing be abolished, but it must come to that or illegal cock-pitting must stop. A gas-light sport with a couple of game cocks under his arms and a bum with a bull terrier in leash, are two very undesirable citizens.

With capons acting as foster-mothers, as per last week's Fancier, and ranches with old maid hens, as witness the following letter from Will Purdy, Sherman, Texas, the poultry business is being shaken to the very center, and the elimination of the prerogatives enjoyed by the flocks of our forefathers is going on at a merry clip.

Here is what Mr. Purdy says:

"I am intending starting a fattening poultry plant here on the Sussex and Surrey principle, cramming, shaping, etc. Will you kindly tell me if poultry killed English style, neck dislocated instead of being bled would sell in your market? I am given to understand that Americans won't buy poultry unless bled. In the English market it is the reverse. Poulterers will not buy chickens that have been bled, claiming that they do not keep so well as those that have only had their necks broken. I am of the same opinion, and our being two or three days' trip from New York would be a consideration. I am pleased to see you advise the use of milk for fattening in this week's "Fancier." I always use it. I am hoping to get through from 500 to 100 per week when we get fairly started, and shall be glad of any information you can give.

I am also seriously thinking of going into the egg business, grading them in color and size, and stamping each egg with our brand, Lyon Poultry Farm, as a guarantee of freshness. All our layers run without male birds."

If Mr. Purdy is going to give us a practical demonstration of how to put a better class of poultry on the markets of this country, he is more than welcome among us, and will find many apt competitors who will be quick to grasp the new idea. After indulging in about the best the New York market can push up in the poultry line for yesterday's dinner, I came to the conclusion anything better must be the real goods. But I will add, I did not select the carcass from the butcher's stall after it had passed through circuitous routes from shipper to consumer, with perhaps a couple days in the shop window thrown in as seasoning. Not much; I was able to select from the original package soon after reaching this market, which goes to prove what I have always contended: no food product is improved by extensive handling; from producer to consumer is the thing. I wish some brother who makes a business of dressing for market, would give us his method of killing, picking and packing. We are all familiar with the way it is said to be done, which I have described to Mr. Purdy in a personal letter, and I think he is wise to follow the American method of bleeding before dressing. I wish him success. I also have a story describing "how the English gardener on the country estate of one of our Wall Street brokers did not kill the rooster by the English method," as describer by an eye-witness, but for want of space I will desist.

EGG LAYING CONTEST IN IRELAND

There has been concluded at the Butts Poultry Farm, Ashover, Chesterfield, Ireland, the great annual competition of the Utility Poultry Club. The season commenced on Oct. 12, 1903, and finished on Jan. 1, 1904. Each pen contained four 1903 pullets, while the total egg yields and points for the season were as follows:

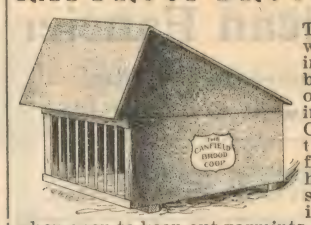
Two points are given for every egg over 1¾ ounces, and one point for every egg weighing 1¾ ounces or less.

The morning meal consisted of "Utilitas" and vegetables, with meat added twice weekly. Mid-day various kinds of grains scattered broadcast on fine days, and on wet days under the shelters. Evening meal a plentiful supply of oats, barley, wheat or maize, given according to the climatic conditions. Occasionally the mid-day meal has been omitted with good results, according to the condition of the birds. Water was supplied twice daily, and in each, drinking vessel was placed a very small piece of sulphate of iron. Good, sharp grit and oyster shells were always before the birds.—Commercial Poultry..



ADIRONDACK CLUB FIXED DATES FOR EXHIBITION AND ELECTED OFFICERS.

The annual meeting of the Adirondack Poultry and Pet Stock Club was held at the office of the American Fancier last evening and brought out a goodly attendance of members. In accordance with the custom of the club to hold a show every other year, dates were selected for an exhibition to be held during the coming show season, and officers were elected for the ensuing year. The dates chosen were November 16 to 19, and with the past extensive experience of the club another successful show may be expected.

The officers chosen were as follows: President, A. E. Blunck; vice-presidents, H. S. Wemple, D. A. Nichols, F. B. Zimmer, E. J. Lorentz, George Phetterplace, G. T. Williams, Ralph R. Chant, John C. Rice, Joseph Spraker, L. F. Fish; corresponding secretary-treasurer, B. W. Mosher; recording secretary, Samuel Peters; superintendent, James Windsor; assistant superintendent, Murray Bryant; executive committee, H. J. Quilhot, J. H. Drevenstedt, John C. Blunck, Frank Randall, Donald Cross.

Various matters of general interest were discussed and the work of preparing for the next show was assigned to committees.

FROM THE EDITOR'S PERCH.

Mr. W. S. Gladney, Jr., will again have charge of the poultry department at the Trenton Inter-State Fair, Trenton, N. J., and that means another strictly up-to-date exhibition equal to the best of winter shows in systematic arrangement of exhibits and promptness in handling the birds and placing the awards. The exact dates have not been announced, but presume they will be the same as in 1903, viz: September 26 to October 1.

Here is a remark found in the Poultry World nearly thirty years ago: "A man is like an egg: You can't tell whether or not he is good until he is broke." That holds good even in this era of commercialism.

Mr. Will Purdy has issued a challenge to Mr. John Rumbold, backing the Diamond Jubilee Orpington against any other fowl that the latter may select. A deposit of ten dollars has been sent by Mr. Purdy. Now let the fun begin.

The catalog of special matings for 1904 of Exmoor's Single Comb Brown Leghorns and Buff Plymouth Rocks is about the most progressive piece of high class business advertising, from a fancier's standpoint, we have yet seen. It is a carefully prepared list of matings of very choice fowl and leaves a very wholesome impression after reading. Purchasers are clearly instructed as to what they buy. The prices are graded according to the merits of the various matings and while to some they may seem high in spots, to the fancier who realizes the value of choice eggs such is not the case. This list is a credit to Mr. Weimer, the proprietor of Exmoor Farms, Lebanon, Pa.

Preparations for a great poultry show at the Canadian National Exhibition of Toronto, are in progress and it will truly be an international exhibition if all the plans are carried out. We expect to shortly give an announcement with all the details, regarding this fine show. The judging will take place Saturday, September 3, and must be finished on that day before the doors are opened to the public.

We publish on another page an article by the veteran judge, fancier and score-card advocate, Mr. I. K. Felch. Uncle Isaac's plea for the decimal card is deserving of careful consideration by those who believe in scoring fowls. His points regarding sweepstake prizes are especially interesting and seem well taken. We decline to take any part in these discussions and will give the two score-card factions a fair field to fight their battles.

Basil D. Miller, Peterboro, N. Y., and Morris Davenport, Dryden, N. Y., were in the city of Johnstown and its vicinity several days last week, and succeeded in reducing the stock of thoroughbred fowls in this county by several hundred. They made large purchases of choice bantams and other fowls, all of which were shipped to Mr. Miller's large farm at Peterboro last Saturday. Mr. Davenport will superintend this fine plant and next fall the Kriemhild Poultry Yards will be represented at all the leading shows with a strictly superior collection of fowl and pet stock.

The next Johnstown show is announced to take place November 16 to 19. Further particulars next week.

The past year in this section, from a poultryman's standpoint, consisted of nine months' winter and three months' bad weather.

To Editors Heck and Shureman, of the Successful Poultry Journal and Commercial Poultry, we extend the glad hand. The April issues of their respective papers bear the ear-marks of real poultry magazines, being readable, interesting and up-to-date.

We congratulate Editor Ely, of the Ohio Poultry Journal, on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the "old reliable chicken paper" of the Buckeye state. It is as good and clean as ever and here is hoping it will live and prosper for many quarter centuries to come.

The executive committee of the American Poultry Association is likely to have a little strenuous business before it at the next meeting. We learn that charges will be preferred against several members.

We have always had the kindliest feelings toward specialty clubs, and when rightly conducted they are of much benefit to the breeds they are devoted to. But when certain more or less influential members use the club as a means to further their selfish ends, the trouble begins. In other words, the many make capital for the few.

* * *

Just so in selecting judges by some specialty clubs. A small clique can easily take up any man they choose, and on the pretense of voting for him as against other candidates, elect him judge at the club show or elsewhere.

A noted judge remarked to us recently that he thought it all wrong to allow his name to be used in connection with the vote for judge of the club he is a member of. We do not blame this judge, as he is an all round adjudicator with a specialty for Mediterranean breeds. Being a man of experience and ability, and of the old school, he naturally resents the idea of being a candidate for an office on the conditions laid down. We have always held that, except in rare instances, it is the duty of the executive committee and secretary of the shows to select judges, regardless of outside interference or influence.

We find in the current issue of Poultry, England, a strong article by E. J. B., entitled "Specialist Poultry Clubs. Are They Beneficial?" The subject we touched upon in the above paragraphs is handled as follows by the writer referred to:

Another item, and the most potent one on the wrong side of the ledger, is the cliquism that these institutions create. Be it in politics, municipal or ecclesiastical matters, cliquism has proved itself a power to be reckoned with, and specialist clubs have been no exception. Do they include the majority of the fanciers of any variety? Generally speaking, far from it. What they do contain is only the leading breeders and a sprinkling of the non-successful. If they were the valuable institutions their promoters allege, such a state of affairs could not exist. One very pertinent reason is the non-successful fancier's dubiety that a deal of "scratch you me and I'll scratch you," is carried on. Club judges are usually drawn from the most successful exhibitors, quite irrespective of their qualifications as breeders, and it is a notorious fact that it does not follow because a man may be a successful breeder he is a capable judge.

"Then, again, the club says, if you do not appoint one of ourselves to judge we cannot grant you our support. Why? Does the club contain all the talent going? If so, it appears peculiarly strange to me that immediately one of its number who was considered an authority ceases to be a member he is no longer able to adjudicate at any show to which the club grants its patronage. Another objection that may be introduced on this head is that by reason of the judges being drawn from the leading exhibitors they know all the previous winners as the season advances. Unpalatable as it may be, the fact cannot be confuted that familiarity with a bird emphasizes either its merits or its faults, therefore many an error is unwittingly made and attributed to the uncertainty of Fancy warfare."

The above is rather plain talk and while the conditions in England may be more serious regarding the abuses practiced by specialty clubs than they are at present in this country, it is just such outspoken language that will help eradicate the evils, and that evils do exist in this connection in the United States, it is folly to deny. Now is a good time to stop the growth of such.

In one of the monthly publications devoted to class advertising a request for an article on "Quality of Circulation" is found. We read enough of the claims made on the basis of quantity and seldom, if ever, on the very important matter of quality. And the latter is of vital interest to class advertisers. To prove the value of quality of circulation we publish in part the following unsolicited testimonial:

Editor American Fancier:

I have received every copy of The American Fancier since it was born and have carried a small "ad" all through from nearly the first number. Many ask me why I don't carry ads. in other papers. Simply because I don't need to. I have never raised enough birds yet but what my one ad in the old Fancier has sold every surplus feather, and they called for more. You have my best wishes.

WILL PURDY CHALLENGES JOHN RUMBOLD.

Editor American Fancier:

I was fortunate enough to get a copy of The American Fancier, dated March 19th, '04; fortunate because I had only just arrived in this country; fortunate because I am able to refute the malicious libel that I found contained in an article written by Mr. John Rumbold, entitled "My First Visit to Madison Square Garden." Honestly I was interested and quite enjoyed reading what Mr. Rumbold had to say, until he starts to describe the Orpingtons. Then I was disgusted. Mr. Rumbold writes: "I can't mention what I saw, but I want to say a few words about the great English mongrels—Orpingtons." Yes, sir! I candidly, honest and squarely believe what Mr. Rumbold writes: "I can't mention what I saw." Did you want to, sir? The first part of Mr. Rumbold's letter led me to believe he was a thorough fancier. What is it that upsets his equilibrium when he gets to the great English mongrels? Are they any bigger mongrels than the American made breeds? The Buffs and Blacks are so well known and appreciated that they need no champion to care for them; they are well able to take care of themselves.

I once visited Madison Square Garden show and like Mr. Rumbold committed my impressions to an English poultry journal, which I believe was reprinted in The American Fancier. Then I was a Game and Game Bantam crank, more especially Bantams, and am so now; but I was not such a crank on Bantams as to write down the big ugly Brahma, barred, buff and white Rocks, white Wyandottes, buff ditto. I believe in every man to his fancy. What sense is there in exposing one's ignorance in writing on a subject that one is entirely ignorant about? I don't care where the next man comes from, I say right here that I can and do admire the barred, buff and white Rocks, Wyandottes, especially silver laced and whites. I have bred them and can appreciate their good qualities.

Mr. Rumbold makes some most sweeping assertions and I hope he will either admit he has made a mistake or that he was only joking. Surely such a well known fancier—and I hope a good one—will not mind an Englishman standing in defense of what he considers the finest fowl living to-day. The rich man's joy, the poor man's friend and the artist's delight. I refer to what Mr. William Cook calls the Diamond Jubilee Orpington, but to give them their proper title, "The Sussex Speckle." Mr. Cook never originated them, but simply discovered them in the Heathfield fattening district in Sussex, where this fowl has been bred for many years before Mr. Cook ever thought of originating any variety of the Orpington fowl. Credit is due to Mr. Cook in discovering them and putting them before the public—but he never made the breed and I hope American fanciers will not be gulled into believing that he did.

Now, Mr. Rumbold, I will quote your own words on these Sussex Speckles, alias Diamond Jubilee Orpingtons: "And as for the Jubilees, I can go out on the market and find more handsome dunghills by the thousand and no doubt just as good in any respect."

When I read the above, I was dumbfounded; and the following aptly crossed my mind:

"Who fails to strike when man's assailed,
For fear of selfish pain or loss;
Who weakly cowers when Right is nailed
Upon the proud world's heavy cross;
Who fails to speak the splendid word
Of bold defiance to a lie;
Whose voice for Truth is faintly heard
When party passions mount on high
That man's a coward; and no deeds
Of valour done on fields of strife
Can prove his courage."
—Hattie Tying Griswold.

So here goes!

I say Mr. Rumbold does not know what he is writing about. He is either a bitter hater of everything "English" or he is a confirmed specialist crank. ---the latter the most miserable to run up against in any show room. All they can talk about is their own one pet variety; every other breed is nowhere.

Mr. Rumbold. Does every fowl of your American made breeds have bright rich yellow legs? Not by thousands—but that does not condemn those that have! Surely the same rule can apply to the Orpington?

My experience with the "Jubilee Orpington" differs from Mr. Rumbold's. I have practically kept and bred all varieties and I will say that for a general all round purpose fowl they cannot be beaten even by the Buff Orpington. What difference does the color of a bird's leg make to its table and egg producing qualities? Why, none. If I prefer white it's no claim that Mr. Rumbold must follow suit in his likes or dislikes! White legged and white skinned birds are preferred in the poultry markets in England. Yellow legs and skins are preferred in America; so says this Mr. Rumbold. So why need he kick up such a fuss? I myself give the American people credit for being quick to discern whether or not a certain breed of fowl is worth handling or not. If it is not it will surely be discarded. All I ask for the "Sussex speckle" is a fair trial, honest, fair criticism and I am confident of the verdict. Mr. Rumbold is evidently laboring under the impression that the so-called "Jubilee" is a newly made breed. It is not; it is older than three-fourths, if not the whole lot of the American manufacture.

Enclosed please find ten dollars, as I believe the Sussex Speckle is "The Business Fowl Up to Date," and am here now prepared to back its qualities against those thousands of dunghills that Mr. Rumbold talks so glibly about. Now, Mr. Rumbold, I should have thought an old fancier like you had no use for dunghills. I have not,—never had; never will. So if you are willing I will bet you an even 100 dollars or more if you like, that you can't find 20 hunghills that can beat or even compare with 20 so-called Jubilee Orpingtons for both laying purposes and for table qualities. One step further, Mr. Rumbold. If dunghills by the thousands can lick "Jubilees" then in your estimation it is a "darn gone cert" on any of the American pure breeds licking them. So I am prepared to hear that you will offer me long odds that they can lick the Jubilees? If so then I am on for another bet and am anxiously waiting to hear the odds, for I am prepared to back my fancy against "all comers." If you mean business, cover the ten dollars posted and we can quickly get to business.

I would suggest that Madison Square Garden would be a fine place to settle the table qualities. My idea is to have half a dozen "Jubilees" shown dressed for market against same number of dunghills or pure breeds (Americans.) Mr. J. H. Drevenstedt and Mr. Butterfield to be the judges. After the judging is over let the loser pay for the whole of the birds and have them cooked for the whole of the judges at the Garden show.

To prove the laying qualities would entail rather more trouble, but I have no doubt that difficulty could be overcome. I am sure there are no lack of good sportsmen among the American fanciers, but that they would delight in assisting in bringing this competition to a head and to shake the winner and loser by the hand when all is over in good fellowship.

Would you credit it, sir? A pal and I were talking this libel affair over this very day in the hearing of a jubilee cockerel. Well, will you believe it sir? That "Jubilee" got "Garn don mad"—that he crowed and crowed and crowed, and just put his fighting tackle on right there? I was interested; the music started again, so I just studied that chicken's talk and here follows my solution:

Look here, boss! Is this the United States customs official Rumbold who writes me down a mongrel? Why, boss, I guess Uncle Sam had better look after some of his officials, for I was passed through the custom house as "full blooded," not as a mongrel. Had I been the latter I would have had the poke. Pay up; we don't want mongrels in this fine country unless you pay duty. But I did not pay, so I am admitted by Mr. Rumbold's colleagues as a pure, full blooded, pedigree fowl, which I am without a doubt. If I am a mongrel, then the customs officials are robbing the citizens of the United States by admitting me duty free. Boss, I heard you tell your pal you were willing to back my table qualities—that I don't comprehend—but if it means fighting I am on it. Just back me for an extra fiver and just tell that Rumbold that I am anxious to meet one or two of them dunghills in a fair, square fight and I will engage to knock 'em "into where all dunghills ought to be" in the "twinkling of an eye, and although I am not above 9 lbs. weight I will give any old White Brahma cock, Rock or Dotte that my insulter can find a few pounds to the good.

I am just anxious to prove that I am no "mongrel" dunghill, but as game as any bird alive. I ain't used to wearing steel spurs, so them as comes to fight me "must wear only their own weapons."

Just to please the chicken and also to prove he has still another good quality—gameness—I will wager $5 that this "Jubilee" can thresh any living cock that John Rumbold can find bred from American birds, natural weapons, please.

Am sorry to trouble you with this long letter, but your paper has such a wide and valuable circulation that should Mr. Rumbold's statement go unchallenged, then a serious damage would be done to a fowl well worth attention.

CANNOT BE EXCELLED.

Editor American Fancier:

I am glad to see the American Fancier back to the old homestead, for it is a fancier's paper from beginning to end, and as an advertising medium it cannot be excelled. Last fall I placed a small classified "ad." with it for Bantams and got inquiries from seven different states, sold all my stock and had to return several checks besides.

Editor American Fancier:

Poultry interests have boomed in Southwest Virginia this last six months, turkeys bringing from 7 to 10 cents gross; other fowls in same proportion. Eggs during December and January, almost any price one would ask, being at no time less than 25 cents. Christmas I heard of one party offering $1.50 for two dozen, which was promptly refused. About March 1 the price dropped to 15 cents, which is fully 50 per cent. above usual prices. There were many turkeys shipped from this section last fall and winter. The senior member of Keys & Co., local dealers at Glade Springs, Va., told me that he had shipped eight carloads, averaging 1,200 to the car, and about 4,000 dressed turkeys, besides weekly shipments of other kinds of poultry and eggs. The winter has been such a fearful one in this section that even our stable hens threw up their jobs—something very unusual in this climate. Everything froze up tight here November 20 and the ground was not entirely free of ice at any time until March 1, and has been frozen half of March. I am 58, but I never saw it that way before.

I am still sticking to my Cornish Indian Games—1890 to 1904. I like them as well or better than ever before, but have an order for 100 eggs right now and haven't the eggs; been holding the hens back all I could and they are just coming in.

I rather think some parties are going it pretty strong on long shanks in Indian Games. The truth of the matter is that a properly bred Indian Game, owing to the very hard and short, close feathers, shows full length of shank and thigh and looks leggy, when an application of the rule will show that such is not the case. The length is apparent, not real—the same may be said of the neck. I also paid particular attention to the letters from Mr. Templeton in a late issue regarding color of legs and lacing on breast of males. I think I can show as yellow legs on my games as any one who breeds them and I do like some dark coloring on the front of the males' shanks, just where foot and shank join. I do not believe it would be possible to breed good shanks for three generations without it. The color would run into a pale or faded yellow and the bright orange and deep lemon would soon be a thing of the past.

Allow lacing in breast of males and you will have to change color of saddle and hackle in males to red, and change neck of hen to red, or throw out 85 per cent. as culls after second year. Among the very few things I saved when my house was burned was a desk in which I kept some special papers, among them being a copy of the old Fanciers' Journal of May 7, 1892, in which was printed the first Indian Game Club Standard. I inclose the sheet to you. I think the description of thighs and shanks about as near correct as we will get it. I also like the description of tail, especially carriage, "at a slight elevation." I also like the short, hard plumage.

I think the craze for very light colored females has done the breed some injury. In order to get it many breeders have resorted to two matings using for pullet breeders males with laced breast and red hackles, and many strains have so much of the red taint (I may call it) that many of the pullets have red necks. I have myself used one or two males that were too light and I have always regretted it. I still see it crops out at times. For several years I have used males as near standard color as I could get and I find the pullets are about 90 per cent. good in color. I would not accept the best cock in America and breed from him if he had much lacing on breast—a very few laced feathers on sides under wing points is not so objectionable. I will be glad to see the new standard.

The greater part of this letter was written several days since and we were hoping the winter was over, but we have had two or three hard freezes and some snow since. While the mercury has been about 50 degrees all day we have had a raw north west wind which was penetrating.

Wishing you a long life and more friends than ever in your new old home, I am, yours truly,

BUCK.

[Below is the Indian Game Standard referred to by our valued correspondent in Virginia. It is of historical interest and we take pleasure in reprinting it.—Ed. A. F.]

INDIAN GAME STANDARD.

Official Standard Adopted by the American Indian Game Club at Philadelphia, January 8, 1892.

Disqualifications.—Decidedly wry tails, crooked backs, artificial coloring or trimming of feathers, combs other than pea, or irregular pea; solid white, blue or black shanks; feathers on shanks or feet.

Standard weights.—Cock nine pounds, cockerel seven and one-half pounds, hens six and one-half pounds, pullets five and one-half pounds.

THE MALE.

Beak.—Strong, well curved, stout where set on head, giving to the bird a powerful appearance.

Head.—Of medium length and width, crown slightly projecting over the eyes.

Eyes.—Full, of good size and with a bold and fearless expression.

Face.—Smooth and fine in texture.

Comb.—Pea, small, firm and closely set upon head.

Wattles.—Very scanty, smooth in texture and even.

Earlobes.—Small, and fine in texture.

Neck.—Medium in length and slightly arched.

Throat.—Dotted with small feathers.

Hackle.—Moderately short, just nicely covering base of neck.

Back.—The top line of the back slightly convex, sloping downward from base of neck to tail and slightly sloping from each side of back bone. Very broad across shoulders, well filled in at the base of neck, carrying its width well back to juncture of the thighs and then narrowing to the tail.

Breast.—Wide, deep, well rounded at sides, projecting forward slightly beyond the wing fronts when the bird is standing erect.

Body and Stern.—Body well rounded at sides, keel bone straight, stern well tucked up.

Wings.—Medium in length, stout and closely folded, the fronts standing out prominently from the body at the shoulders, and points well rounded when folded and should be closely tucked at ends, and held about on a line with tail coverts.

Tail.—Rather short, compact and closely folded when the bird is standing at ease, and carried at a slight elevation. Sickles and coverts very narrow.

Thighs and Shanks.—Thighs round, stout, of medium length and well apart. Shanks of medium length, not stilty, stout in bone and smoothly scaled.

Feet.—Large, clean and flat, the toes long, clean, straight and well spread, the hind toe set low and extending backward. Nails strong and well shaped.

Plumage.—Short, hard and very glossy.

Body.—In hand firm, compact and muscular.

Carriage and Style.—Very erect, upright and commanding, giving an appearance of vigor and activity.

Size.—Large, the larger the better, other qualities being equal.

THE FEMALE.—SHAPE.

Beak.—Strong, well curved, stout where set on head, giving the bird a powerful appearance.

Head.—Of medium length and width, the crown slightly projecting over the eyes.

Eyes.—Full, of good size, with a bold and fearless expression.

Face.—Smooth and fine in texture.

Comb.—Pea, very small, firm and closely set upon the head.

Wattles.—Very scanty, smooth and even in texture.

Ear Lobes.—Small, and fine in texture.

Neck.—Medium in length and slightly arched.

Throat.—Dotted with small feathers.

Hackle.—Moderately short.

Back.—The top line of back slightly convex and sloping downward from base of neck to tail, and slightly sloping from each side of back bone. Very broad across shoulders. Well filled in at the base of neck, carrying its width well back to the juncture of the thighs, and then narrowing to the tail.

Breast.—Wide, deep, well rounded at sides and projecting forward slightly beyond the wing fronts, when the bird is standing erect.

Body and Stern.—Body well rounded at sides, keel bone straight. Stern well tucked up.

Wings.—Medium in length, stout and closely folded, the fronts standing out prominently from the body at the shoulders, and points well rounded, when folded, and should be closely tucked at ends, and held about on a line with tail coverts.

Tail.—Rather short, compact and closely folded when the bird is standing at ease, carried at a slightly greater elevation than that of the cock, due to the slightly less erect carriage of the bird.

Thighs and Shanks.—Thighs round, stout, of medium length and well apart. Shanks of medium length but not stilty, stout in bone and smoothly scaled.

Feet.—Large, clean and flat, the toes long, clean, straight and well spread, the hind toe set low and extending backward, the nails strong and well shaped.

Plumage.—Short, hard and very glossy.

Body in Hand.—Firm, compact and muscular.

Carriage and Style.—Erect, upright and commanding, similar to that of the male, but not quite so erect.

Size.—Large, the larger the better, other qualities being equal.

THE MALE—COLOR.

Combs, Wattles and Earlobes.—Bright red.

Neck.—Hackle green glossy black, with brown crimson shaft to each feather.

Back—Green glossy black and dark crimson red intermixed, the black greatly predominating. Saddle like the back, but with a somewhat larger proportion of dark crimson red.

Breast—Rich glossy black, free from any other color.

Body and Stern—Black.

Wings—Wing front black, wing bow green glossy black and dark crimson red intermixed, the black greatly predominating. Wing coverts, forming the wing bar, metallic black. Primaries black, except a narrow edging of bay on the outside of the lower web. Secondaries, upper web black, lower web about one-third black, next to shaft of feather, the remainder being bay.

Tail.—Black, sickle feathers and tail coverts glossy, greenish black.

Legs and Feet.—Thighs black, shanks and feet rich yellow or orange.

THE FEMALE.—COLOR.

Comb, Wattles and Earlobes.—Bright red.

Neck.—Hackle glossy black, with a bay shaft to each feather, the black greatly predominating.

Back.—Ground color bay, each feather laced with one or more narrow lacings of lustrous black, the lac-

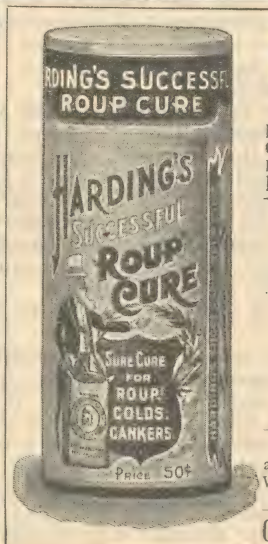
HIGH CLASS



Black Minorcas and White Wyandottes

Our breeding yards not only contain the leading winners at the late New York show, but were selected from yards that have done the bulk of the winning at Madison Square Garden for the past six years. At Rochester we won seven out of a possible ten first prizes.

Eggs for hatching orders will be booked for a very limited number of eggs from yards composed entirely of New York and Rochester winners at $10.00 per 13 straight. All other pens $3.00 per 13; $5.00 for 26.

A Hatching .. Wonder ..

The new "CYCLE" Hatcher. The perfected result of the latest discoveries in artificial incubation. A wonder of the 20th century. An entirely original and novel method of hatching and brooding chicks. It requires only the self-supplied moisture of the egg itself. No egg tray doors to open. Regulation automatic and scientifically exact. Holds from 50 to 10,000 and can be set when started with 50 or more eggs per day until its capacity is complete, making unnecessary to fill entire machine at starting. Eggs cooled without removal from machine. Will hatch hens, ducks, geese, or turkey eggs equally well and at the same time. Made entirely of metal and asbestos; fire-proof and will not warp, swell, shrink or crack.

A hen never hatches better or stronger chickens than when setting on the ground, in which event the underside of the eggs are cooler than the upper surface, and the "Cycle Hatcher" is the only machine built following closely the natural laws of incubation covering this very essential point, as well as many others.

When the fresh air enters the machine near the center tube it carries with it the moisture it naturally contains. On becoming heated it rapidly expands as it is carried along the heated surface, and because the upper metal of the egg chamber is still warmer than the incoming air, the moisture is carried along until it reaches a cooler surface, where it condenses, leaving the dry air to rise again to be forced out in waves by the rapidly expanding air above.

It would be impossible to get the same results from a wooden machine or one made from any other absorbing material. In the Cycle the only thing that can absorb moisture is the asbestos felt directly under the eggs, where it should be, which never becomes absolutely dry during the process of incubation.

50 egg size only $5.00. Full particulars promptly furnished on application.

ings following the contour of the web of the feather.

Breast.—Ground color bay, each feather laced with one or more narrow lacings of lustrous black, the lacings following the contour of the web of the feather.

Body and Stern.—Body, ground color bay, each feather laced with one or more narrow lacings of lustrous black, the lacings following the contour of the web of feathers. Stern black, or black tinged with bay.

Wings.—Bow and coverts bay, each feather laced with one or more narrow lacings of lustrous black, the lacings following the contour of the web of the feathers; primaries, black except a narrow edge of irregularly pencilled bay upon the outer part of the lower web; secondaries, upper web black, lower web black next to shaft of feather, with a broad margin of irregularly pencilled bay.

Tail.—Main feathers black except the two upper or deck feathers, which are irregularly pencilled. The main feathers may also be irregularly pencilled. Coverts bay, laced with one or more narrow lacings of lustrous black, the lacings following the contour of the web of the feathers.

Legs and Feet.—Thighs black, more or less laced, but solid black not to be considered a serious defect; shanks and feet rich yellow or orange.

Note 1.—In the plumage of the female the ideal should have the plumage laced over the entire bird, from the crown of the head to the end of the tail and to the junction of the thighs with the shanks. This is seldom attained.

Note 2.—Either single or double lacings are allowable, but double lacings should always be given preference, other qualities being equal.

Note 3.—Inasmuch as the beauty of the female consists in the vivid contrast between the glossy black of the lacings and the bay of the ground color, and as this contrast can be best observed when the lacings are narrow and the ground color a golden bay, these are points which should be kept constantly before the mind of the breeder.

Note 4.—In males, on top of wings at joints, and on lower part of breast are frequently found bare spots, and as these bare spots are a natural characteristic of the breed, they should not be regarded as defects in judging.

Note 5.—Dubbed and undubbed male birds may compete together, but from the score of the male bird shall be deducted three points, the full value of the comb.

MODEL POULTRY FARM.

All About Chicken Raising and Pigeon Homing May Be Learned at the World's Fair.

St. Louis, April 16.—The most pretentious breeding poultry show ever held is that in the Model Poultry Farm at the World's Fair. The farm is attractive as well as educational. In model houses equipped with the latest modern improvements are shown thoroughbred domestic fowls of every known variety, including waterfowls; pheasants and pigeons.

The latest methods of breeding are exemplified. In the main pavilion are forty incubators where chicks and ducklings are hatched daily. The young birds are advanced through indoor and outdoor brooders and colony pens, being moved ahead one pen a day until they are ready for the table. A restaurant is run in conjunction with the farm, in which no meats except poultry and poultry products are served.

Pigeon racing is a feature of the farm. A model loft has been provided for the training and racing of homing pigeons. Races from 25 miles to 300 miles are flown from time to time. Entries of two birds each are accepted from fanciers. The birds must be 1904 hatch that have never been outside the home loft. Suitable prizes are awarded in these races.

Some of the finest game cocks in the country will be exhibited, a cocking main being provided for that purpose.

An attraction for the children are the sixteen pens of the smallest variety of bantams. These pigmy chickens only weigh about one and a quarter pounds each. A variety of Belgian hares and rabbits are to be shown.

MR. HOPLA REPLIES TO MR. RICKER

Editor American Fancier:

In your issue of April 2d I note Mr. Ricker's reply to mine of recent date. I would respectfully request our friend Ricker to refrain from mentioning Mr. Hodge's name in any way, shape or form in connection with the controversy now going on between Mr. Ricker and myself. I consider myself perfectly capable to back up any assertions I have made and I do not wish his name brought before the public in any such deal as this. I will say that our friend Ricker's defense is very very weak and needs a little tonic to strengthen it. I have in my possession correspondence from some of the leading and well known Game Bantam breeders in this country in regards to his New York report and also his letter in your last issue. Could he see the contents of some of them, it would make his hair turn gray and he might then think that my suggestion about going away back and sitting down was in order and for the good of the cause. As far as the Columbia Poultry Farm goes, I would venture to say as to the future success of our establishment, I doubt if he will ever reach the mark or will be able to show the record the Columbia Farm made in 1903 and '04, namely: 22 specials, 156 firsts, 58 seconds, 33 thirds, 38 fourths, 34 fifths, 7 silver cups and numerous cash specials, at six of the largest shows held here in the East, (Not a bad showing, Mr. Ricker, is it?) and we have not been breeding twenty years. If your experience in Game Bantams dates as far back as that it is high time you knew the difference between a disqualified bird and one that is not. As an exhibitor, or one who claims to know, I should think you were taking big chances in showing such a specimen in a show like New York, or any other for that matter. When again you review the awards at the last New York show if you will only advise me that the print is not very good or that your eyesight may be getting a little poor, I will with pleasure send you down a powerful magnifying glass that will enable you to see more plainly, and probably you will be able to find a few more blues the Columbia Farm won at New York, which were twenty-three ribbons in all, not one blue on twenty entries. Allow me to put you wise to this fact, should you at any time be called upon again during any controversy that might come up in regards to this matter, for I am positive after taking part in a debate on this subject you would feel most awfully embarrassed when you found you had been so horribly mistaken. Well, enough said for this time I think, as I do not want to burden our readers or take up too much space in The American Fancier, and will conclude by saying that I have the backing of twenty-five to twenty-five hundred dollars, if agreeable, which will be placed in the hands of our friend Mr. J. H. Drevenstedt, that the first prize B. B. R. Game Bantam hen at New York show was a disqualified bird, the same to be decided by two of our most prominent breeders and judges in the Game Bantam Club, who we all know, and I think would without question say one and all of us, that they were certainly capable of a fair decision.

GOOD WHITEWASH.

An excellent whitewash, to be used outside or in, is made as follows: Slake one bushel of good stone lime in boiling water, keeping it covered while slaking; strain and add one-half peck of salt dissolved in warm water, three pounds of ground rice boiled to a thin paste, one-half pound powdered Spanish whiting and one pound clear glue dissolved in warm warter. Mix this all thoroughly with the slaked lime and let stand for several days. Apply as hot as possible with a clean brush.—Commercial Poultry.

200-Egg Incubator for $12.80

The simplicity of the Stahl incubators created a demand that forced production to such great proportions it is now possible to offer a first-class 200-egg incubator for $12.80. This new incubator is an enlargement of the famous recognized the most perfect small hatcher. This new incubator is thoroughly well made; is a marvel of simplicity, and so perfect in its working that it hatches every fertile egg. Write for anything you want to know about incubators. Send for the new free illustrated catalogue with 14 colored views.

Horace Havemeyer, - Stamford, Conn.

IT'S A CINCH

to breed the BUFF WYANDOTTE winners if one has the right kind of stock, SUITABLY MATED. It's one thing to secure individuality, but to reproduce or BREED ON, it's absolutely necessary that a specimen's ancestry for A TERM OF YEARS be of the very best of it's time. "Like begets like," OR LIKE ITS ANCESTRY—more often perhaps the latter. What does prove a success from a breeder's standpoint is INDIVIDUALITY BACKED UP WITH A RICH INHERITANCE of first prize winners for many generations. So far, doubtless you agree with me. Now, where better can you find the desired NICKING qualities than from a strain that has been successfully maintained before the public since the origin of the breed?

For FIVE YEARS IN SUCCESSION we have won at New York or Boston THREE OF THE FIRST PRIZES; one year winning ALL THE FIVE FIRSTS AT NEW YORK; another year ALL FIRSTS AT BOSTON, save on pen; each year winning MORE FIRSTS THAN ALL COMPETITORS COMBINED . . . . . .

We have birds for sale that descend straight from these first prize winners. Past years matings were headed by such males as follows: 1-3-5 COCKS, 2 and 3 OPEN CLASS, and 1 and 2 PEN COCKERELS, BOSTON, 1903, also the sires of the four mentioned cockerels, Talk about male producing strains, WHERE IS ITS EQUAL? We don't charge any more for OUR KIND than those claimed to be (?) just as good. Write us for anything you want.

We shall sell eggs at $3.00 per thirteen straight, We are now preparing a circular giving our method of mating which has proven so successful. It is free to those who send for it. Egg orders booked now for future delivery, insuring shipment when wanted. (Send for Catalogue.)

BARRED AND BUFF ROCKS.

I have won the past season at the following shows: Fitchburg, Mass., Stamford, Conn., South Framingham, Mass., Manchester, N. H , New Bedford, Mass. The above Barred Cockerels were all sired by 3d cockerel. 1903, Madison Square Garden, New York winner, 63 cockerels in this class. Reliable Poultry Journal February, 1903, liked this cockerel above all others in the show. I have a few cockerels sired by above cockerel for sale from $4.00 upwards. Standard weight of very even color, barred well all over. If you want to improve your blood these cockerels are what you want. Money returned if birds don't suit you. I have had my pens mated up by one of the leading Poultry Judges in America—4 pens headed by high scoring cockerels. I have also one pen of Buff Rocks. For the cockerel in this pen and two pullets I gave Mr. Higgins, of Orange, Mass , $75. I have not many sittings to dispose of therefore have your orders booked early. My eggs will be from same pens as I breed from myself. Choicest Eggs $2.00 a sitting.

Barred Plymouth Rocks.

Valuable Pointers on Breeding America's Most Famous Fowl.

By "Iroquois."

"I like Barred Rocks better than any other variety of fowls, but they are the most unsatisfactory to a breeder of any variety I know," said a poultryman to us at the recent New York show.

"In what respect?"

"They do not reproduce themselves. As winter layers and as table fowls they cannot be beaten. For a man living in the city,or suburbs, they are the best, owing to their docile dispositions. They are home bodies; they don't wander, or fly over fences. But from a fancy standpoint—for exhibition—they breed more 'culls' than any breed of to-day."

"It is said because few people know how to mate them."

"There's something in that, perhaps; but even the oldest breeders—men who breed each season from 500 to 1,000 Barred Rocks—are compelled to buy most of the birds they exhibit."

A strong argument, truly, and one we were not ready to controvert. But since then we have turned the matter over several times and sought to assign some reason for it. Isn't is because the standard imposes a hardship in demanding that both male and female shall be identical in color, which nature refuses to yield unless artificial selection is made in mating? Is it because the breed is composed of heterogeneous elements which refuse to blend? Is it because of the multiplicity of judges, each of whom favors a differing type, or is it because the Barred Rock being the most popular variety has become the tool of mere commercialism, and is bred with a view only to exhibition and not to transmit its qualities? Or being considered a "chance" bird, is the Barred Rock bred in vast quantities instead of for quality, leaving it for blind chance to produce one good one in a thousand?

"How is he bred?" was the question often asked at the New York show of 1904 by many in the groups gathered around Mr. Colby's cockerel. Barred Rock breeders often ask to know the "strain" of a winner, just as horsemen do of the latest successful race horse. Some pointed to his light color, and said he was a "pullet-bred bird." Whether he was or not I am unable to say, but I believe Mr. Colby has bred Barred Rocks for twenty years and have his authority for the statement that some of his stock came originally from Mr. S. L. Crook of Mansfield, Mass., and Mr. Crook obtained the stock of Mr. J. Fred Watson of Nashua, N. H. In the revision of the Standard in the late "seventies" the color description was said to have been taken from Mr. Watson's birds.

Mr. Latham's pullet strain came largely from Mr. Colby's. At the Boston show of 1897, Mr. Colby took one of the pen prizes and Mr. Latham purchased the pullets. From these came "Gloria," Mr. Latham's 1st Boston pullet of 1898, from which came "Gloria II," 2d pullet at Boston, 1899, and she bred "Superba," 2d Boston pullet of 1900. A son of "Gloria II," called "Glorious," sired "Philla," 1st pullet at Philadelphia, 2d Boston, 1902, while "Philla's" brother, "Glorious II," sired "Dolly Madison," 1st pullet at New York, 1903. The 1st pullet at Washington, 1901, (Vosburgh's) was bred from a daughter of "Gloria II."

It is very fascinating to be able to trace the pedigree of the show winners. And it is also the exception. There have been few strains of Barred Rocks which have reproduced themselves—the element of chance enters more strongly into their breeding than that of any other variety. Most of the great winners are "picked up" birds. Their exhibitors lead you to suppose they bred them, but they seldom do—they buy them. They will seldom sell them; not because their fingers do not itch to exchange them for currency, but because, 1st, it is a great advertisement to have them in their own yard; 2d. because they know little or nothing of their breeding and fear the buyer will only breed from them a lot of "misfits" and then the secret is out.

Mr. Scudder, who has for years judged Barred Rocks at the New York shows, once told me that he gave $100 for a cock bird that had won at a leading show. He was "a wonder to look at" and he expected great things of him as a stud bird. Imagine his horror when nine out of ten sired by this bird "came full of red feather and other disqualifying properties," to use his own words. This is only one of many cases. An exhibitor don't care to sell such a bird because he fears scandal, and injury to his reputation as a breeder. If he had bred the bird, and knew its ancestry for generations, he would have less scruple. But he generally has bought the bird for the sole purpose of winning, knowing nothing of its pedigree and anxious only to secure the advertising the mere winning brings him.

THE HERALD SQUARE EXHIBITION HALL, NEW YORK.

Where the First Annual Show of the Association of Poultry and Pet Stock Breeders of Greater New York and Vicinity Will Be Held.

This is one of the chief reasons why the Barred Rocks are so difficult to breed to feather. We will grant that they are naturally a hard pattern of feathering to breed correctly. But few breeders persevere in breeding them by pedigree. They are in it as a business and must have winners. Hence, they depend too much upon buying. It is necessary to their trade to have winners at the large shows. Hence, while they breed a lot, they also have an order with many smaller breeders to sell them their best. Each autumn they will be found visiting other people's yards to see what they have, and the smaller shows in quest of a promising bird. They also have agents on the lookout. If another breeder gets ahead of them in the purchase of exceptional birds, they won't exhibit. In short, they cannot afford to be beaten —it would injure their trade. Thus, commercialism governs all. They buy and borrow and their own stock is bred merely to fill the orders the bought or borrowed birds have brought them in the way of advertisement by winning at large shows.

Hence, if Barred Rocks can be bred correct to type it must be by some man who breeds for that ultimate purpose, irrespective of immediate success in the show room. He will have to be a man who buys seldom and then is careful about crossing the purchased birds with his own. He will be one who starts with superior specimens and adheres to his own strain, and by observation learns how to mate them. He will keep pedigrees and use trap nests, knowing which hen is the mother of each chicken. It must be a slow process, and full of mistakes which will take him years in each case to correct. I fear no professional breeder will be able to do. It must be some fancier who does it for the love of it. It was Sir John Sebright and a small circle of his friends who perfected the Sebright Bantams by years of attentive breeding and holding, under the auspices of their little club, exhibitions in friendly rivalry. The Sebright is a strong evidence of what scientific breeding can accomplish.

"You will learn that poultry affairs are so arranged as to bring the money of the many into the pockets of the few." So wrote to me a gentleman fancier who a few years since fairly swept the board at New York's shows with his Brown Leghorn females. Then he proceeded to show how this was done by so wording the Standard of Perfection as to render it necessary for breeders of most varieties of fowls to maintain two (2) strains, one for breeding cockerels, the other for breeding pullets. This was a violation of the law of nature—but it "made business." It compassed the sale of twice as many fowls.

Similar is the case of Barred Rocks. The Standard ordains that males and females must be of the same color. This is a blow to nature, for anyone who has bred Barred Rocks knows the males come a lighter shade than females. The male can only be produced by selection at strenuous variance with natural laws. The best breeders admit this. The result is we have cockerel and pullet strains, distinct from each other. Yet, in the face of this, it is notorious that some of the finest females of recent years have been produced by a cross with a cockerel strain. Cases can be named if necessary—winners at leading shows. Yet most breeders would probably deny it—it would give their secret to the great unwashed, or it might hurt their sales. Long continued breeding of pullet strains probably weakened color. By dipping into cockerel blood they get the stronger color. Thus many a modern exhibition female is made for exhibition only—she will not reproduce her type.

How can birds bred this way reproduce themselves? A bird whose ancestors represented a dozen different shades of color reverts to each of them in its produce and its chickens. Mr. Darwin and the late Herbert Spencer both investigated deeply into the "Transmissibility of Acquired Characteristics," with the result that they found that to reproduce a type it was necessary to adhere rigorously to a controlling factor of that type in the pedigree. But where a show bird is the result of widely varying types, it cannot reproduce its own type to a reasonable percentage, because its type is individual, and not strain type. We have seen birds bred from 1st prize females at great exhibitions which their breeders would be ashamed to own. They represented a dozen shades of color and patterns of barring.

As hinted before, we are tempted to believe that the Barred Rock is more than any other a "chance" bird, because his breeding is left more to chance than is that of any other variety. Breeders can tell you the sire of a bird, but not one in a hundred can tell you its dam. There plan is to put a male with from six to ten hens, each differing in type, and trusting to "chance" to get a prize bird out of a thousand they breed. Then they scour the country for the best birds they can purchase. Their sole aim is to possess the winner at New York, Boston or Chicago, and the "business" the advertisement brings them.

This is not breeding in the highest sense of the term. The truly scientific breeders are those who have produced the new varieties, as they bred with a definite aim. The Silver Penciled and Partridge Wyandottes have made greater improvement in type in the four years they have been shown than the Barred Rocks have in 20 years. It may be they are an easier type to breed, but if the Barred Rock breeders had bred as scientifically as these Wyandotte-makers, and not been led truant by commercialism, it is a question is the Barred Rock would be the "freak" if so often is.

RICKER SUMS UP.

Editor American Fancier:

I notice our wily and insinuating friend, C. G. Hopla, sends another dose of hot air in reply to my recent communication. I tried to make matters plain enough that we might at once get to business without further attempts on his part at free advertising, obscure threats and hidden insinuations, etc. I will make it plain enough this time that it will be a case of "put up or shut up" as far as I am concerned. In future attacks on judges, exhibitors or reporters if he signs his name as an individual instead of as representing the plant on which he is employed, he will be doubtless thus treated. It matters not to me in this controversy what prizes he may have won at fall fairs, where in many breeds it is only necessary to show to win everything in sight. Nor does this alter the truth of my statement that the only first prize won at N. Y. on some 24 entries was one on a duck, as shown by the official catalogue, in poultry classes. If this sort of free advertising is considered sufficiently profitable to recompense an attempt to put the writer in a hole with a few fellow fanciers, he is welcome to it. I notice he has large backing. I did not intend to limit by wager particularly to a $50 purse, but thought this amount would be sufficiently large enough to settle the question at issue. However, in forwarding his N. Y. draft to the American Fancier I will attempt to meet any reasonable addition he may wish to make to the original suggestion. There is naturally a slight risk in a matter of this kind and perhaps some of those numerous correspondents he hints at may wish to join him. I am extremely anxious to experience the remarkable sensation of feeling my hair turn gray from those revelations, or anything else connected with the fancy of Bantams. Now, I will pay any expense to have the hen identified as the one shown at N. Y., and the editor will have no difficulty in finding a fair judge (not necessarily of Game Bantams) who can pass on a wry tail, within the meaning of standard disqualification. I only ask a fair deal, will be easily satisfied with reasonable conditions, and wishing to avoid inflicting on the Fancier and its readers anything further in the way of wind from Mr. C. G. Hopla, I insist that he either—in the words of the Akoond of squat—either deficate or relinquish his seat.

JUDGES FOR SPRINGFIELD SHOW.

The directors of the Springfield (Mass.) Poultry and Pet Stock Association have selected the following judges for the show to be held in the city hall, December 13-16, 1904: C. A. Ballou of Worcester, Mass.; M. F. Delano, Millville, N. J.; G. H. Northup, Raceville, N. Y.; W. H. Card, Bristol, Ct.; A. F. Pierce, Winchester, N. H.; G. P. Coffin, Freeport, Me.; W. J. Stanton, New York; J. Fred Watson, Nashua, N. H., T. E. Orr, Beaver, Pa.

The association held a very successful show last December, but owing to the suspension of the bank in which the association's funds were on deposit, the day after the show closed, there was some delay in the payment of premiums. All bills and premiums have now been paid in full and the Association looks forward to a successful show the coming season. Arrangements are now under way to provide better light in City Hall, which will be pleasing to exhibitors, judges and the public generally. The show will again be cooped with Empire coops.

ANOTHER CHALLENGE.

Editor American Fancier:

It certainly seems good to have the American Fancier back in its old home with its old dress brightened up like new. I never did like flashy dresses. I am quite interested in that challenge. If the grand old Lt. Brahma had been bred a little more for laying I would challenge them against the Orpington or any other breed, but we fanciers are too apt to ignore utility in our efforts to produce some of our fads. For instance, many breeders are striving for a black wing flight in the Brahma. Now, I think the new Standard ought to read just as it does at present: "Black and white, black to predominate." I like to see a black wing, but as long as we get so many speckled backs in trying to get it and as some of those speckled backs are bound to be our best layers, what are we going to do—have distinct laying matings, as well as cockerel and pullet matings? We don't want to spoil the best breed on earth.

The breed that lays,
As well as weighs,
Is the breed that pays.

I suppose Mr. Purdy will size me up as one of those specialist cranks he tells about, but I am willing to defend my "own one pet variety," and I will challenge him to produce an Orpington hen that will lay 313 eggs in 333 days—the highest individual laying record known, which was accomplished by a Light Brahma hen. With sufficient proof of this, I will send Mr. Purdy a prize of $5.00. I would send check with this letter if I thought there was any need of it.

Now "let the fun commence" in earnest.

Mr. Howell, associate editor of The American Fancier, will furnish weekly reports on the egg and poultry market, and answer all questions submitted to him relating to commercial and practical poultry keeping. When replies are requested to be sent by letter, stamps must be enclosed and letters addressed to George E. Howell, 70 Christopher St., New York City.

Eggs.—Receipts for week reached near the 150,000 case mark. While storage operations are going forward briskly, the present consumption is dragging; N. Y. state and nearby fancy selected stock going at 20c., mixed colors 19, fancy western, fit to store, 18½, southern 15½ to 17½, goose eggs 35c., duck eggs 20 to 25c per dozen.

Poultry—39 cars live and 11,000 packages dressed poultry, week's receipts, and prices a cent a pound lower. Fowls, live 13, dressed 13 to 13½, chicks, fancy roasters 16 to 17c., dressed, down as low as 12c for poor grades; best live chickens 12½, Phila. broilers, dressing under 3 lb. to pair, 35 to 45c per lb.

The extremely cold character of this spring has been trying to the soul of the poultryman, after the coldest winter on record, rendering a low fertility in eggs, to have it following by a spring so cold that once hatched, the rearing of chicks becomes doubly difficult, it takes a pretty good backbone not to get discouraged. Yet there is no half-way post; protection must be afforded or else a total loss.

Chicks in brooder houses are safe while in the brooder house, but to get the exercise they must have to thrive they must get out. The same with the hen and her brood. While covered by the mother in a snug coop the cold is forgotten, but they, too, must get out. The question is how to get them out and avoid exposure; glass runs are too costly, and the temperature too varying. Any kind of a tight roof and sides covered with burlap or muslin will pay for itself many times over. Under this shed some scratching material can be placed, and a few kernels of cracked grain can be buried in it at intervals during the day, which will keep them incessantly busy, and the owner can congratulate himself on the fact that no leg weakness will appear. A chick that hovers on the warm bottom long, as it must on cold days if idle, is bound to contract leg weakness; the body grows but the muscles of the legs and toes stand still, which causes all the trouble, then down and out goes the chick As I said at the commencement, the few early chicks on such years as this become doubly valuable, and the prepared poultry keeper will profit by his foresight.

Owing to the many difficulties between labor and capital, and the strikes now on or contemplated, the earning capacity, and of course the spending capacity, of the people here in New York city has fallen to a very low figure. The first interest to be affected has been the dairy interest. To the many farmers now producing milk at little or no profit and depleting the fertility of their farms, a few lessons from the poultrymen are in order. Sell off one-half the cows and raise your own feed; with the proceeds of the cattle sale build houses about the farm, not those showy structures, but the plain business houses; build them in places that are protected, not where the thermometer goes the lowest, but where it will run up the highest during a cold night, it may be in a hollow or on an elevation. Build as near square as possible and as near the ground as consistent with convenient handling. Utilize the entire floor space by placing roosts over a raised platform and nests and feed troughs on the sides.

The houses can be stocked with next winter's layers easily. Along about August come here to the market and buy half-grown pullets by the pound, by so doing you have your stock practically raised without growing a horde of cockerels.

Now then, farmers, having told you how to start on the rapid transit plan, let me tell you what these fowls will do for you. First, you will have a product that will find a ready market at full market price; 2d, the revenues will equal, if not exceed those of the dairy; 3d, by carefully saving the manure and applying to the orchards a crop of fruit is assured every season, off year or no off year; also on every other portion of the farm where applied, direct benefits will be observed and some of the soil fertility which went away in the milk cans will return.

Having embarked in an enterprise of this kind don't think it is a loafing business, you will have to work every day in the year the same as I do, only with this difference, when the circus comes to town you can take a half holiday and I cannot.

And don't think I do not know about the milk business. Barring such times as the railroads were unable to deliver it, there hasn't been a time in two years but what Anna Held could have duplicated her famous milk baths.

Further, a dairy cow costs these times $6.00 and yields a profit of from $15.00 to $40.00 a year in milk, above the cost of her feed. $65.00 will buy and place 65 pullets at laying age. I would be ashamed to look the meanest hen on earth in the face if I couldn't knock a yearly two-dollar profit out of her. Once stocked up, improvement in the flock should commence.

A fellow out in Oregon writes: "Strange to say, my hens have never stole a nest away." Probably the trap variety; had they succeeded, would have most likely tackled the house next.

W. D. H., Harrisonburg, Va., writes: "I gather eleven dozen eggs daily from 200 hens. I have them in three divisions, but they can run all over the place if they choose to. I am thinking of building a house 15x30 ft. on the southeast side of the hill. I think of building the west and north side walls of limestone rocks, leaving about two feet of rocks above ground. Do you consider it a good plan? I think the A. F. is a good poultry paper. Give us readers a good talk on S. C. Brown Leghorns, as I want to learn something.

Well, brother, in talking about the Single Combed Brown Leghorn you set me in a most congenial task. For downright impudence and an ability to get there, commend me to the Brown Leghorn. Mr. Burgott's article in last week's Fancier leaves little to say. The color of the modern Brown Leghorn is darker than I fancy, but fashion rules in the wardrobe of the hen as well as that of the up-to-date damsel. There is no more handsome coat of plumage put on a chicken than covers the Browns, when the brick red and the washed-out brown colors are dispensed with. The greatest evil besetting them is the small size of the eggs they lay, but this can be remedied to a great extent by breeding two and three-year-old hens, using those laying the large eggs, which can easily be settled before breeding time by using the trap nest. By keeping them over the second and third year the size of the eggs will improve and the number of chickens reared can be smaller, an important item in a Leghorn, as they are not an all around breed, never was and never will be.

For males, select a medium sized comb, with the proper number of serrations; next, tolerate only a hackle and a saddle with a prominent stripe the length of the feather, avoid all tendency to white in the undercolor of the neck hackle, also flight and sickle feathers; the breast should be black with a greenish cast to the gloss on the feather Set such a bird on a strong pair of yellow shanks of good length, to overcome any tendency to dumpishness.

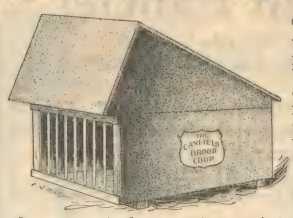
If there is a Brown Leghorn breeder who does not become enthusiastic over such a bird, he isn't a 33d degree crank and ought to get out of the business.

About that house; which is the more protected, the location being only a matter of taste, the east or west side of the hill? The wall of stone is all right, but must be filled solid with a quality of concrete that will stop rats and other vermin. Start the foundation three feet below the floor level and commence the concrete a foot below the floor level; lay your floor either of cement or boards, on broken stone a foot deep. Be sure the drainage is thorough leading under the house that no water may collect, as dampness will be your chief enemy. This in your climate ought to be overcome by ventilation, if not a partition of boards, making an air space between, will be necessary for those side walls.

Our neighbor over on Broadway has come back on his critic in the Tribune Farmer, mentioned some time since in these columns. Mr. McGrew, in support of his government report on the origination of the Wyandottes, says, there are others not residing on Hemlock Lake who were instrumental in placing the Silvers in the way of a boom during the eighties, namely, one Fred A. Houdlett. We can only answer, Amen.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

1. R. W. B., Kearneyville, W. Va. Do you think the Indian Game matures as quickly as the Plymouth Rock or Wyandotte?



II. If the general public were furnished with every conceivable size of egg, at the same prize per pound, for what weight egg do you think there would be the most demand?

I. The Indian Game will not mature as quickly as either the Wyandotte or Plymouth Rock. The meat of the Indian Game ranks very high in quality. Where young stock is being raised for market, the Indian Game as top cross on either the Rocks or Wyandotte would give grand results, both in quality and quantity of meat. The object in using the Game as top cross is that either of the other two breeds will outlay them, hence more eggs to hatch from, and an opportunity to raise more stock. As pointed out in remarks on crossing in this week's article, don't cross for last week's article, don't cross for breeding purposes, choose the one your fancy dictates and breed straight.

II. Well, my experience in coming in contact with the general public is that it is divided in two classes. Given their choice, fully as many would buy those running at say 7 to the pound as would choose the 10 to the pound—some go in for quality and others hit up the quantity.

In grading a crate of eggs to be sold by the quarter's worth, we very nearly follow your pound idea as expressed in your question. The absolutely perfect eggs are placed in one basket and sold at say 10 for a quarter, while the small and otherwise inferior ones we offer at 15 for a quarter, and the general public take their choice. Each and each grade is patronized about equally.

SATURDAY, MAY 7, 1904.

May has burst upon us in all the glory of the brightness and freshness of spring. The sunny days, clear blue skies and grateful warmth have started vegetation with a jump and caused unalloyed joy to chickendom. To watch the old hens and their lord strut about in the morning dew picking up the unsuspecting worm or grub, picking away at the tender grass, delights the heart of the chicken fancier. He likes to see his pets have the best the land affords, and like a good fellow, provides for just such occasions. The spring awakening in man and beast is, after all, the gladdest time of the year.

The following poem was sent to us as an explanation of the failure of the president of the American Poultry Association to catch a train one day last week:

ON THE WAY TO BUFFALO.

The president bought his ticket,
But in deep affairs of state,
His thoughts soared like his Wyandotte's price,
And the train it could not wait.
We said alas! Orr something else,
As he stood out in the rain
Holding that printed coupon,
When he should have held the train.
—Phelps.

The article on Barred Plymouth Rocks by "Iroquois," should be carefully read and studied. It teems with facts and not fancies. It should open the eyes of fanciers to the real condition of the Barred Rock business as conducted by those whose greed for the almighty dollar is greater than the possession of a fair name. The writer has studied his subject closely and is no novice in breeding Barred Rocks; in fact, he is an authority on breeding live stock, both bipeds and quadrupeds.

We regret to learn that Henry Hales, the veteran fancier and breeder of Dorkings, has been quite sick, but thanks to a magnificent constitution, the octogenarian has conquered la grippe, and like Richard, is "himself again." Mr. Hales is the oldest member of the American Poultry Association and belongs to the old school of fanciers, men who love their birds and the fascination the breeding of choice specimens offered them. Long life to rare old Henry Hales say we.

If a certain writer would get some of the cold in his feet into his head, a good dose of quinine or phenacetine might relieve him and make him better natured and less pessimistic. The world, and the A. P. A. especially, seems to have chilled his azure-tinted blood to such an extent that the world outside of his own dear little personality, is only a dreary vacuum.

Salmon Faverolles and Lakenvelders have been added to the classification in the premium list of the World's Fair. They should have been listed in the first place. International expositions should not be stingy in classifications; they should recognize the breeds of other countries as well as those of their own.

A reader wants to know what to do with an egg-bound hen. Immerse her in water as hot as the human hand can bear, for about ten to fifteen minutes and the egg will be expelled naturally. Give dose of linseed or sweet oil afterward. Where this complaint is frequent, reduce grain food and give bran mash and vegetable food. Too rich food is usually the cause of the trouble.

"The shadow on a sheet" breed, the Lakenvelder, is evidently in for a big boom. Dr. Phelps informs us that he has been compelled to shut off the demand for eggs from his imported pens, the orders being far in excess of what he anticipated.

August D. Arnold, that old and mellow fancier of the Keystone state, at whose fine farm at Dillsbury, Pa., the first Buff Leghorns were bred in America and who is now also a fancier of Silver Pencilled Wyandottes, writes us that eggs from the latter have hatched remarkably well since early in the spring. Having hatched all the chickens he wants, he will sell eggs at a reasonable price the balance of the season, and part with a few trios and pens of birds. Mr. Arnold also states that the demand for Buff Leghorn eggs has been remarkable, indicating that this breed is on the top wave of popularity. The genial Gustav Arnold has also been elected by the club to judge Buff Leghorns at St. Louis, but declined the judgeship before the result of the election was known, as he believes the work should be given to the older judges, who give most of their time to this work. At the same time, we regret that Mr. Arnold has declined a job he was so well qualified to undertake.

The new headings "From the Editor's Perch" and "Practical Pointers" are from designs of Louis P. Graham of Philadelphia, Pa., a young artist who is rapidly forging to the front in this class of work. He makes a specialty of artistic advertising matter, and although fanciers have not seen as yet much of his work, the Game and Game Bantam breeders are well acquainted with the latter and have been liberal patrons of his. As a delineator of Game and Game Bantam fowl, Mr. Graham is without a peer in this or any other country.

Another young artist who is rapidly forging to the front is Arthur O. Schilling, Rochester, N. Y. Some of his recent work in Cochin and Japanese Bantams indicates remarkable talent, the technique of his drawings approaching the finish of older and more experienced artists. It is a pleasure to the writer to encourage the younger artists, especially as both Mr. Graham and Mr. Schilling did their first work for papers we were connected with.

Here is a nice little problem for our score card friends to study over, submitted by Mr. E. F. Doty, Merchantville, N. J.:

"Speaking of high scoring and as a matter of interest, let me call your attention to a late gathering of members of the Philadelphia Collie Club. A celebrated rough Collie bitch known as "Brandane Ethel" was scored at this meeting as an object lesson, by an English judge acknowledged to be well qualified. Out of a possible 100 points, constituting absolute perfection, she was considered 73 per cent. perfect. The Collie is perhaps brought to as high standard of perfection in the best specimens as any animal or bird, with very few exceptions, and this particular bitch is a remarkably good one, having amongst other numerous achievements on the show bench been a winner at the last show of the Westminster Kennel Club. Now what would our score card friends think of a judge who scored our best birds 73 points? I think the figures are eloquent and that it is a case of "nuff sed" from me this time. Who has the floor?"

The above will furnish considerable food for reflection. Later on when the new Standard of Perfection is issued and the beautiful piece of work by Franklane L. Sewell representing an ideal Barred Plymouth Rock male is scrutinized, who will have the temerity to say that Barred Rocks as seen in life can or will score over 90 points? But that is another story to be published later.

CANADIAN NATIONAL EXHIBITION

Editor American Fancier:

The changes and judges passed the board last week, so am able to give you now their names as follows: J. H. Drevenstedt, Wyandottes and Javas; G. H. Northup, Raceville, N. Y., Andalusians, Spanish and Minorcas; S. Butterfield (address unknown, supposed to be America somewhere), Asiatics, Orpingtons, Dorkings and Ornamental Bantams; Jos. Bennett, Toronto, Plymouth Rocks; L. G. Jarvis, Montreal, Polands, Houdans, Geese and Ducks; Geo. H. Burgott, Lawton's Station, N. Y., Leghorns; Thos. Smelt, Woodstock, Ont., Hamburgs, Miscellaneous, Creves and La Fleche. Toronto has always been a hot bed for Games and Game Bantams, so this year they have appointed one of England's most noted breeders to fill that capacity and are awaiting a cablegram from him. Turkeys, Jas. Anderson, Guelph; Cage Birds, Dr. A. Bondtfee, Toronto; Pet Stock, I. B. Johnson, Toronto.

The association has added a 3d prize of 50 cents on all classes of poultry, canaries and pigeons. The poultry being now $2, $1 and 50c, and if there are eight to eleven entries in the section the prizes are $2, $1, 75c, 50, and if 12 and over, $3, $2, $1, 75c, 50c, for a 25c entry fee and no restriction as to number in class. Judging to commence Saturday morning, Sept. 3d, at 8 o'clock, and all exhibitors and public are excluded from the building until 1 p. m., by which time the judges are supposed to be through with their work. This will give them five hours of uninterrupted time in which they should do what classes are assigned to them. No names will be allowed on the coops until after the judging is finished.

We expect to see a bumper house.

A. W. BELL.

ROSE COMB BUFF LEGHORNS.

Editor American Fancier:

I have been reading the article written by Mr. F. S. Zwick on Rose Comb B. Leghorns. I think as he does, that we ought to push this one bird to the front as fast as possible. I have bred the Buff Wyandotte and S. C. Buff Leghorns for quite a number of years and thought they were a fine bird, but I am now making a specialty of the R. C. B. Leghorns and believe they are the coming all-purpose fowl. They are somewhat larger than the Brown Leghorns and equal if not better layers. What is finer than a flock of golden buff R. C. Leghorns on a green lawn in the spring of the year, with their fine carriage and low combs, white ear lobes, yellow shanks and buff to the skin. Where is there a prettier bird? I have them as near right as their cousins. I believe my birds have taken first wherever they have been shown. I would like to see them in the standard providing we stick to the score card. I am not a member of the Buff Leghorn club, but expect to be soon I would like to hear from one on shape of comb. I am breeding them as near like the R. C. Browns as possible.

MODERN ANCONAS.

As already mentioned, when a new breed of fowls has been introduced to the English public, it has either been manufactured or made by the crossing of some of the older breeds, or, as in a few instances, been brought to foreign countries, and to which of the two or other source our present-day Anconas are indebted for their existence, readers will, from the early and modern references, be able to draw their own conclusions, and this despite the fact that many attempts through the poultry press in England have been made to write them down as a cross between the black and the white Minorca, or the black Minorca and white Leghorn. The majority of the writers asserted that they could be so produced. The actual Ancona breeders as firmly denying this, and describing such statements as mere guess or theory. However, irrespective of the actual lineage or ancestry of the birds seen in England between 1830 and 1870, it is a recorded fact that Captain Rowle, of the s. s. "Bugle," about 1884, brought to England a dozen birds direct from Ancona, and further importation in 1887, and whether these birds were kept and bred pure, or the blood got mingled with those in England already bearing that name is not important; suffice to say that about a dozen years ago Anconas were getting moderately plentiful, and were to be found in quite a number of English poultry yards, and at some of the important poultry shows a pair of them could usually be seen in the any-other-variety classes. The frequent appearances of them here with an occasional first prize attached was responsible for them getting talked and written about to such a degree that an agitation arose amongst their patrons to get them recognized as a breed, and due acknowledgment in the show-pen. These efforts of the breeders were crowned with success in 1896, when the management of the Briggs Show were prevailed upon to insert two classes for Anconas, with the result that six cocks and nine hens appeared in open competition, this being the first public appearance of the black and white fowls competing against each other as a recognized breed. I have already said that these birds became to be fairly well known and written about in the early nineties, all the old poultry works being diligently searched for anything of interest to send along the then poultry craze. Martin Doyle in 1854, says:—"The Anconas of all sub-varieties show too clearly the result of a cross. There seldom is much white about the face and in many cases none; the ear-lobe is, however, of that color, though not so long and full as in the black (Spanish). The comb and gills are generally more pendant, and if examined, the former will be found more deeply serrated and thrown toward the base; but they possess the general characteristics of the Spanish class, and are excellent layers. They are of a very unsettled color, spotted with white, but far from regularly marked."

Fifteen years later, John Bailey in his book on fowls, says:—"The Ancona, although it has been before the public for some years, has made little progress in becoming a favorite. It is not surprising, as it is more curious than handsome. Its chief peculiarity is a comb of most unusual size, which hangs over, entirely concealing one side of the face; its wattles are also very long and large. It is rather undersized than otherwise, and short-legged. The common color is black intermixed with white feathers. They are said to be prolific layers, and to produce unusually large eggs." Miss E. J. Minards, of Cornwall, wrote in 1893;—"I have lately gone in for this breed and when thinking of doing so, my mother said, 'They are capital birds; I kept them at Givenapp fifty years ago.'" Mrs. Bourlay, Frankley Rectory, Birmingham, contributes the following: "From an experience of several years, I have found them most profitable as winter layers of good-sized eggs, for, being of very active habit and always on the move, they do not seem to feel the cold weather which so seriously affects some of the heavier sorts of birds. They are extremely hardy and strong, and flourish in the coldest and most exposed situations (such as our own, 730 feet above sea level), seldom suffering from any ailment if not overfed or kept in badly ventilated houses. I also hear from many of my customers that they do very well indeed in small and confined runs. The chickens are lively and very 'forward,' developing with great rapidity under proper treatment. The cockerels begin to crow and should be separated from the pullets at two months old, and pullets often begin to lay at four months. As in all mottled varieties it is not easy to breed the ideal bird, but careful selection does much, and we may hope to succeed in time, without, I earnestly trust, losing those useful qualities which make them the workingman's birds as well as the pets of the fancier."

Miss Phyllis H. M. Eliot, The Vicarage, Wellesbourne, Warwick, says:—"Respecting my experience of the Ancona fowl, I have pleasure in saying that I find them very excellent as layers. They are also singularly healthy fowls, and the chickens are particularly hardy and easy to rear. They are excellent foragers, and not at all hungry fowls, and being a light, active breed, do best where they can have perfect liberty. They are only fair table fowls, but owing to their small bones, an Ancona hen, properly cooked, might easily pass for a spring chicken. They are pretty and very uncommon in appearance, and our flock in a large grass field attracts a good deal of admiration. I think, taking them all round, they are the most generally satisfactory breed. I should have no hesitation in recommending them to anyone beginning poultry keeping."

Miss Ada Gaunt, Alvechurch, writes:—"I have kept Anconas since 1895, and have found them more profitable than any other breed I had hitherto kept. They are excellent winter layers, laying after my other hens have left off, and commencing again earlier, taking very little rest. Some people complain that they lay small eggs; they do when quite young, but afterwards their eggs often equal the Minorca's in size. I have found them most easy to rear, having scarcely lost a chick, although our soil is cold and rather damp. It has been said that they are not a good table fowl. I have found that they have given every satisfaction, the meat being tender and delicate, the breast long and plump, and legs and bones small. They are capital foragers, consequently inexpensive to keep. I am sorry I have not kept an exact account of the number of eggs they have laid, as I feel sure they would compare well with any other breed."

The above contributions are but a few samples of the many on this subject, which appeared in the English poultry press in the years 1898 and 1899, all of which assisted in bringing the Anconas into more prominent notice, and enlisted many supporters for the breed.

The London and provincial newspapers, not to be behind when any new sensation was on hand, has occasional references to the new breed, the following from Lloyd's Weekly Newspaper being typical of numerous articles which appeared on the subject:"—"Amongst the new breeds that are in no way indebted to fashion or loud advertisment, but which are steadily gaining in public estimation, solely through their merits, are the Anconas. The special faculty of this fowl is to lay a large number of eggs, particularly in the winter, neither frost nor wet having any effect on them in this respect. Some years ago, the black and white Minorca were crossed together, and the offspring thus produced were described in the poultry books of the day as Anconas. But these were not the true Anconas, and the birds of that name now seen are very different. About twelve years since, some fowls were imported from Ancona, in North Italy, by Captain Rowle, of the 'Bugle.' These appear to have attracted but little attention at that time, but being again brought to this country from Ancona in 1887, they were exhibited at several shows, where they were much noticed. Since that date, they have steadily increased in popularity, and the present Anconas had their origin in these birds. In appearance, the Ancona takes much after the Leghorn in shape, with the plumage black and white mottled, and the beak and legs yellow. In the cock bird the comb is large, upright, and single, with deep serrations; the ear-lobes are white, the wattles large and of fine texture, the hackles and body feathers black, edged with white, and the tail with long sickle feathers of black and white. The hen has a large single comb, falling over the face, and her plumage should be as even in marking as possible, every feather being black tipped with white. In many specimens the legs are spotted with black. This is a point that the fancier will doubtless object to, but it is hoped that if he attempts to breed for yellow legs only he will not interfere with in any way, or sacrifice the splendid laying qualities of the bird, as has already been done in the case of other originally useful fowls."

ANCONAS IN ENGLAND.

If any breed of fowls got a good send off on the road to popularity, Anconas certainly are the breed. A remarkable feature, and was assisted largely to this breeders and patrons in the days of its nativity, were ladies, every one of whom talked of Anconas, wrote of them, advertised them, and agitated for them, until 1896, when they influenced the committee of the Brigg show to provide two classes for the breed, and from that day until the present Anconas have literally boomed, and yet there was a legitimate reason for this boom none of its patrons yet deny. The one overwhelming characteristic as embodied in every contribution on the subject being that of extraordinary lays of a good marketable sized white egg. Amongst those largely responsible for the present day prominence of the breed in England are the Hon. Mrs. Deedes, of Hythe, Kent; Miss Phyllis Eliot, The Vicarage, Wellesbourne, Warwick; Mrs. Mynors, Weatheroak Hall, Alvechurch; Miss Ada C. Gaunt, The Cottage, Alvechurch; Mrs. Bourlay, Frankley Rectory, Birmingham; Mr. E. P. Chancefi Edgbaston; E. Cobb & Co., Tatenhill, Burton on Trent; Heap Bros., Burnley; Mrs. Barnes, Toltington, Bury; J. Ashton, Brigg, Lincolnshire, &c.

The plentifulness and popularity of any breed of fowls can generally be fairly well gauged by the number of them which appear at the large poultry shows; these shows just being as true an indicator of the decadence of a breed. The managements, however, of these large exhibitions have always to be satisfied as to the stability and prospects of a new breed before they venture to give such special classification, hence for a couple of years, beginning at Brigg, a large number of the English provincial shows catered for Anconas, the big classical fixtures only looking on with interest, until the winter of 1898, when the British Dairy Association, seeing they could no longer ignore the claims of the patrons of this breed, assented to the insertion in their poultry program two classes for Anconas, one each for cockerels and pullets, i. e., birds bred the same year. The response from fanciers was fully up to expectations, twenty-four exhibits appeared; the following year they rose to fifty-eight; and the third year of their appearance at the Dairy, in 1900, the two classes contributed seventy-eight exhibits, this being a more rapid rise to show-pen popularity than that recorded for any other breed during the same period.

At the Dairy Show of last year the numbers were slightly reduced; this, however, was not attributable to any lapse of interest in the breed, but rather to the fact of a rather more exacting standard having been adopted, which in one section alone handicapped many hitherto good specimens from much chance of an award; this matter, however, will be duly noted in that chapter dealing with the judging of Anconas, suffice here to say that this rather small fowl of a black and white color, and Leghorn build, continues in England one of the favorite breeds, its patrons for exhibition purposes are numerous and increasing, while those breeders who eschew the show-pen and value fowls only for their commercial worth as egg-producers are regularly enlisting in the Ancona ranks, at the expense of some of the older varieties or those of mixed parentage.

ANCONAS IN AUSTRALIA.

When writing on the various breeds in 1899, Anconas were attracting a good deal of attention in England, and in my brief introduction to the breed, I said: "Anconas cannot correctly be called a new breed, but rather a resuscitated old one, their most wonderful laying qualities being responsible for the prominent position they now occupy amongst the breeds noted for excessive egg production," and concluded with the following: "Anconas have not yet reached Australia, and when they do their profitable character should soon establish them in public favor; hence those interested in the first importations will find the speculation a profitable one.

Generally speaking, poultry are kept for either of two purposes, or both, first as an industry, its object which like all others is profit, and that this result is not always attained does not effect the object. The other purpose is as a hobby—something to satisfy the cravings to which most people are subject, to relieve the monotony of one's every day existence, by exercising the brain in a direction other than that of its daily occupation, one writer not inaptly describing hobbyism as something to give the brain a holiday.

This hobby, when applied to poultry, is usually associated with pure-bred or prize fowls, the lobbyists' ambition being to produce some specimens more to an ideal than that hitherto produced by others working for a like purpose. This leads to the competitive spirit which has its outcome in the poultry shows, and prizes. These prizes enhance the value of the owner's stock by creating a demand for these superior specimens, and thus the hobbyist who possibly had no other object than providing an interesting pastime for his leisure moments, by attempting to produce some special feather or shape, is unconsciously launched into the great sea of commercialism, fancy fowls, i. e., exhibition birds being now as consistently bred by their owners with the object of profit as are those of less blue blood by the poultry farmer who has no other source of income, hence when I wrote four years ago that the first importers of Anconas to this country should do well with them, I felt sure that some of the enterprising fanciers would soon take up the cue, and I was not disappointed. Whether the results have so far warranted my then sanguine expectations and predictions is for others to judge, certain it is that varieties of other breeds then also unknown in Australia, and for which I had a good word, have since arrived here and taken the popular taste to a greater degree than Anconas; however, the popularity which these latter varieties enjoy is due to causes which will be fully explained when Ancona importers and breeders in this state now, and as the

A Hatching .. Wonder ..

The new "CYCLE" Hatcher. The perfected result of the latest discoveries in artificial incubation. A wonder of the 20th century. An entirely original and novel method of hatching and brooding chicks. It requires only the self-supplied moisture of the egg itself. No egg tray doors to open. Regulation automatic and scientifically exact. Holds from 50 to 10,000 and can be set when started with 50 or more eggs per day until its capacity is complete, making unnecessary to fill entire machine at starting. Eggs cooled without removal from machine. Will hatch hens, ducks, geese, or turkey eggs equally well and at the same time. Made entirely of metal and asbestos; fire-proof and will not warp, swell, shrink or crack.

A hen never hatches better or stronger chickens than when setting on the ground, in which event the underside of the eggs are cooler than the upper surface, and the "Cycle Hatcher" is the only machine built following closely the natural laws of incubation covering this very essential point, as well as many others.

When the fresh air enters the machine near the center tube it carries with it the moisture it naturally contains. On becoming heated it rapidly expands as it is carried along the heated surface, and because the upper metal of the egg chamber is still warmer than the incoming air, the moisture is carried along until it reaches a cooler surface, where it condenses, leaving the dry air to rise again to be forced out in waves by the rapidly expanding air above.

It would be impossible to get the same results from a wooden machine or one made from any other absorbing material. In the Cycle the only thing that can absorb moisture is the asbestos felt directly under the eggs, where it should be, which never becomes absolutely dry during the process of incubation.

50 egg size only $5.00. Full particulars promptly furnished on application.

majority of these breeders have and do keep other varieties of fowls as well, they are the people who can supply first-hand information about the quality of these fowls, and as they are well-known breeders of repute, their experience on this subject should form a lasting testimony to the merits or otherwise to this, to Australia, new breeds of fowls, and to secure the unbiased opinions of these the pioneer breeders of Anconas in this country, I some time ago addressed a circular as follows:

THE HISTORY OF DOMESTIC FOWLS.

So great is the interest now prevalent in all that relates to domestic fowls, and that interest is so likely to be productive of national benefit, that we shall devote the present and some future pages to a consideration of their history. We shall do this the more readily because it will enable us to bring in succession before our readers the works of the chief writers upon the subject.

It must have struck everyone conversant with the Bible that, abounding as does the Old Testament with beautiful similes, yet not one is derived from the habits of the domestic fowl. This may have arisen, as is suggested in one of the best books we have on poultry, "because tending them would be the occupation of women, whose domestic employments are less prominently brought forward by Oriental writers than the active enterprises of men;" and this opinion is sustained by our knowledge that the milder spirit, commended and illustrated by our Saviour, made Him select the brooding hen as the comparison to make His hearers feel more forcibly His anxiety to gather together and to cherish the Jewish people. In one of the apocryphal books (2 Esdras ,i. 30) appears the same simile, but there is great reason to believe that this book was written in the first century after the Crucifixion.

Not only is there an absence in the Old Testament of all similes derived from the domestic fowl, but even any mention of it is obscure. The only passage in which we think it is clearly referred to is in the fourth verse of the twelfth chapter of Ecclesiastes. It is there stated that one of the habits of the aged is that "he shall rise up at the voice of the bird," "This," says Dr. Parkhurst, "appears to be the house cock, at whose first crowing the restless old man is ready to quit his uneasy bed." The same good Hebrew scholar considers also that when Nehemiah states "fowls were prepared" as part of his daily provision during the Jewish captivity in Persia (Nehemiah v. 48), that domestic fowls were intended, observing that these are still sold in the Aleppo markets.

That domestic fowls were well known and fostered by the earliest nations of which we have record is certain, and we know not how it can be disputed that they existed before the Noahchide Flood; for if they did not, it would be difficult to explain how they reached the islands in the Pacific, where they were found to be abundant when those islands were first discovered by Captain Cook. Be this as it may, it is quite evident that they were in such great request in Egypt at the earliest time of which a faithful history is preserved, that their eggs were hatched artificially. We know this, on the authority of Diodorus Siculus, an historian who lived about half a century before the birth of Christ; that is, nearly 2,000 years ago.

We have notices of the regard paid by the Grecians to domestic fowls at a period of more than four centuries earlier than that, and by them poultry was considered as particularly under the guardianship of Mars, their God of War. They were offered to him in sacrifice, and are so mentioned by Aristophanes, who flourished 430 B. C. The crowing of cocks was considered an auspicious omen, for it was heard just previously to the victory of Themistocles over the Persians, 480 B. C., and he instituted an annual feast in consequence, and distinguished it as the Alectryonon ayon, which may be Englished, The Cock Festival. The reason of the cocks crowing being interpreted an omen of success was because he sits silent and moody when overcome, but struts and crows when he triumphs in his contests.

The same superstitions influenced the Romans, a people of whose practice in husbandry, poultry-keeping inclusive, we possess fuller information than of any of the other ancient nations. Cato, the most ancient of their writers on such subjects, has a chapter on the fattening of fowls and geese; but passing on to another author, Columella, who lived a century lately—namely about the year 50 of the Christian Era—we find in his pages very full particulars concerning the Roman fowls and their management. These we shall extract with such comments and illustrations as they seem to require.

"The keeping of fowls is a usual occupation of the farmer. The kinds are either the poultry-yard, or the country, or the African. The poultry-yard fowl is a bird commonly observed at nearly every country residence; the wild fowl (rustica) is not unlike it, and is caught by the fowler. There are many of these in an island situated in the Ligurian Set (on the coast of Italy), which the mariners, lengthening the name of the fowl, call Gallinaria." From this passage we gather that there were then in Europe a wild species of the domestic fowl. Varro mentions the same island, but observes that the poultry upon it were probably the result of the common poultry-yard fowls put upon the island by seamen during their visits. It deserves remark that Juvenal mentions a wood near Cumae, in Italy, called "The Poultry Wood" (Gallinaria sylva).

Of the African or Numidian fowl we shall take no further notice at present, as Columella evidently intended by it that which we know as the Guinea fowl, Pintado, and Gallina. "The females of the poultry yard fowls are properly called hens (gallinae), the males cocks (galli), and the half males capons (capi). The profit arising from these fowls is not despicable if skill be employed in bringing them up. For this skill many of the Greeks, and especially of the Delians, were celebrated. They, however, preferring large-bodied fowls, and fowls courageous and obstinate in fighting, selected chiefly the Tanagrian and Rhodian kinds. They scarcely less preferred the Chalcidian and Median, which the ignorant vulgar, by changing a letter, call the Melian. For our own part we chiefly prefer our own Italian breed, for we have no taste for that pursuit of the Greeks, who preferred the fiercest to fight for their amusement. We prefer to show our opinion how an industrious housekeeper may provide a yearly income, rather than instruct a master of cocks, or a keeper of quarrelsome fowls, whose whole patrimony often is hazarded and carried off by the victor in this poultry pugilism."

Varro tells us that the Median variety was brought from Media on account of its large size, and its offspring continuing to resemble it the name was retained. Media, it is worthy to remark, was a country in Asia, that quarter of the globe still celebrated for the size of its fowls. The Tanagrian breed came from Tanagra, a Grecian town, greatly celebrated for cock fighting; and the Chalcidian variety from Chalcis, a town in one of the Greek islands.

We shall next detail the points which the Romans considered characteristic of excellence in fowls—Poultry, England.

THE LAKENFELDER CLUB OF AMERICA.

We, the undersigned general officers and believers in "a shadow on a sheet," appeal to all breeders, fanciers and lovers of this everlasting layer to join us to assist in forming a standard. Our members have in their yards to-day the cream of Europe's record-making flocks and with the actual up to date specimens to guide us, we will find it satisfying work to make a standard for Lakenfelder, far-reaching and plain enough to remain the law for generations to come. We are not guessing as to what we have and we are not speculating as to what we want.

Lakenfelder, the perpetual motion egg-machines of the coming day, the wonderful black and white everlasting workers, admired wherever they are beheld, are known and have stood the test as "everlasting layers" and "Jerusalems" in Holland Belgium, England, Austria, France, Sweden, and last, but not least, in Germany, this land of origination. The members of this club in backing them as layers, in breeding them, a rare Fanciers' Breed, and in fully believing in them as the coming fowl for aesthetically inclined Americans, desiring a combination of the "most practical" with the "most sensationally beautiful," shall have been repaid amply for the expense and trouble of introduction, if they find their beloved "shadows on sheets" multiplying on farms or suburban homes, aiding thrifty keepers to lay coins on edge for future rainy days.

The admission to club is $1.00 and the annual dues are $1.00, and any one, breeding or admiring "shadows on sheet,'5' is eligible to membership. For further particulars and fully illustrated descriptive matter of Lakenfelders, send 10 cents in stamps to secretary's office, amount to be refunded to all who join club.

Henry F. Lietz, Meriden, Conn.

Dear Sir:—I received birds from you in good shape and have shown three of the five pairs of R. C. Homers and won first cock, third hen at Rochester, N.Y.; on another pair, first cock, 1st hen at Harrisburg, Pa., and on remaining old pair won second cock and second hen at Pittsburg, Pa. I think the prizes I have won are enough to satisfy the most exacting customer.

Yours truly.

AMERICAN POLISH CLUB.

At the annual meeting of the American Polish club, held at Chicago, Ill., on January 27, 1904, during the week of the great Chicago show, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Chas. L. Seely, Afton, N. Y.; general vice president, John Homer, Carlinville, Ill.; secretary and treasurer, M. V. Caldwell, Leetonia, Ohio.

Executive Committee—Chas. L. Seely, Afton, N. Y.; John Homer, Carlinville, Ill.; M. V. Caldwell, Leetonia, Ohio; W. H. Card, Bristol, Conn.; J. W. Bruckart, Lititz, Pa.; Will J. Kelly, Cambridge Springs, Pa.; E. S. Douglas, Montague, Mich.; Wm. McNeil, London, Canada; James Lilburn, Emerald Grove, Wis.; chairman of executive committee, Wm. McNeil, London, Canada.

Advisory Board—B. F. Bryant, Johnson Creek, N.Y.; Chris Kirschler, Newark, N. J.; R. E. Smith, Afton, N. Y.; E. C. Howe, Brightwood, Mass.; Dr. H. F. Ballard, Chenoa, Ill.; Allan Bogue, London, Canada; Mrs. Smma Swenson, Chicago Heights, Ill.; Chas. G. Woodworth, Owega, Oklahoma; Geo. E. Peer, Rochester, N. Y.; C. Bishop, Meriden, Conn.; J. H. Uher, Cleveland, Ohio; Wm. Edgar, Freemansburg, Pa.

State Vice Presidents—Ohio, J. H. Uher, East Cleveland ;Pennsylvania, J. W. Bruckart, Lititz; New York, B. F. Bryant, Johnson Creek; New Jersey, Chris Kirschler, Newark; Connecticut, W. H. Card, Bristol; Massachusetts, E. A. Howe, Brightwood; Michigan, E. S. Douglas, Montague; Illinois, Dr. H. F. Ballard, Chenoa; Wisconsin, Jas. Lilburn, Emerald Grove; Kansas, Jas. C. Jones, Leavenworth; Texas, Sam Stern, San Antonio; Oklahoma, Chas. G. Woodworth, Omega; for Canada, Robert Middlemiss, Brantford; Minnesota, John Peterson, Rochester.

The following new members have been admitted to the club, viz.: Richard Edgar, Bethlehem, Pa.; Richard Oke, London, Canada; H. B. Donovan, Toronto, Canada; Louis N. Mier, Rutherford, N. J.; John Peterson, Rochester, Minnesota. There will be a special meeting of the club at St. Louis, Mo., on November 1, during the World's Fair Poultry Show. Anyone desiring to offer any specials on Polish for this show should notify the secretary at once, in order that the same may appear in the World's Fair prize list. From present indications the exhibit of Polish at St. Louis in October will be by far the largest and best display of Polish ever seen on the American continent. Now, Polish brethren, let me say to you, begin at once to prepare your birds for this great show, as it will be a battle royal in the Polish alley for supremacy, in which the victors may rest on their laurels for some time to come. And if you are not a member of the Polish Club the first thing you should do is to join the club. It costs only $1.00 to do so, which will start you on the right road to success. It will give you a standing and prestige among the fraternity you cannot obtain in any other way. Our catalogue explains all. A stamp will bring it. Address: M. V. Caldwell, Sec'y and Treas., Leetonia, Ohio.

WHITE MINORCAS.

In looking over the pages of the American Fancier we see but very little, if any, mention of White Minorcas, and we wonder why. Here we have one of the most valuable breeds in existence, and so little said about them in the poultry journals, perhaps the poultry-loving public is not aware that such a grand breed of fowls exists.

White Minorcas until of late have been under weight, that is, the majority of them have been handicapped by this defect. But to-day a few certain breeders are showing White Minorcas that are above standard weight, in fact as large as the blacks, and not only have they the necessary weight but are true Minorcas through and through—grand station, beautiful combs, long backs and white as the whitest Leghorn or Wyandotte bred.

If one is desirous of having a well filled egg basket he had better try the White Minorcas, they will not disappoint any one in this capacity. Their chief characteristic seems to be how many large white eggs they can produce.

We note with pride that the shows this past winter have had the White Minorca classes well filled. They seem to be growing in public favor, and no reason why they should not, for they are one of the grandest breeds in existence.

If anyone is undecided which breed meets his desire most we hope they will try the White Minorca, for as a beauty or utility fowl they cannot be surpassed.

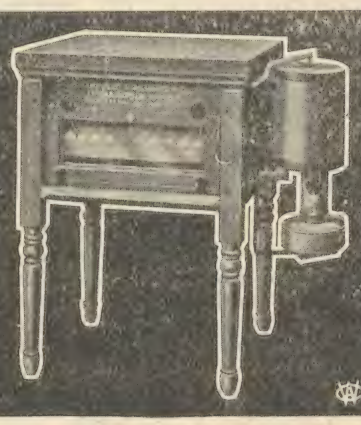
SILVER PENCILED WYANDOTTES.



First, Second and Third on Cockerels at Madison Square Garden

In hot competition has never been equalled. Some of the leading winners in the west this season came direct from our yards. All our breeding yards are headed by high quality male birds. Eggs extremely fertile all season. Last test made April 22, was 3 infertile eggs out of 120 eggs in this variety. This great fertility has given us all the chicks we can handle and we now offer eggs at right prices, and a few trios and pens at low figures for quality of stock. 57tf

Iam the owner of the above Trade Mark, and if it is on the incubator or brooder you purchase, it is a guarantee that you are getting the latest development of my skill and experience, and also a better machine than I have ever built before. They are not the "Cyphers" by name, but the "Model." Please do not get the two machines confused. Note the new testimonials each month:

NORTHFIELD WHITE LEGHORN RANGE.

BAKERSVILLE, N. J., Mar. 31, 1904.

Dear Sir: When I renewed my lease of the Haddon Hall Poultry Farm I started up your Model Incubator. The cellar was very cold, and none of my old Cyphers Incubators would hold up the temperature. Your new machine hatched from 100 eggs every fertile egg, and the chicks all lived. The second hatch has just come off, and every fertile egg was hatched, and the chicks are strong and active. I believe that your new machine is enough better than the "Cyphers" to warrant any expert in selling his old machine and installing the "Model." Yours very truly, H. M. BURR.

Horace Havemeyer, - Stamford, Conn.

IT'S A CINCH

to breed the BUFF WYANDOTTE winners if one has the right kind of stock, SUITABLY MATED. It's one thing to secure individuality, but to reproduce or BREED ON, it's absolutely necessary that a specimen's ancestry for A TERM OF YEARS be of the very best of it's time. "Like begets like," OR LIKE ITS ANCESTRY—more often perhaps the latter. What does prove a success from a breeder's standpoint is INDIVIDUALITY BACKED UP WITH A RICH INHERITANCE of first prize winners for many generations. So far, doubtless you agree with me. Now, where better can you find the desired NICKING qualities than from a strain that has been successfully maintained before the public since the origin of the breed?

For FIVE YEARS IN SUCCESSION we have won at New York or Boston THREE OF THE FIRST PRIZES; one year winning ALL THE FIVE FIRSTS AT NEW YORK; another year ALL FIRSTS AT BOSTON, save on pen; each year winning MORE FIRSTS THAN ALL COMPETITORS COMBINED . . . . . .

We have birds for sale that descend straight from these first prize winners. Past years matings were headed by such males as follows: 1-3-5 COCKS, 2 and 3 OPEN CLASS, and 1 and 2 PEN COCKERELS, BOSTON, 1903, also the sires of the four mentioned cockerels, Talk about male producing strains, WHERE IS ITS EQUAL? We don't charge any more for OUR KIND than those claimed to be (?) just as good. Write us for anything you want.

We shall sell eggs at $3.00 per thirteen straight, We are now preparing a circular giving our method of mating which has proven so successful. It is free to those who send for it. Egg orders booked now for future delivery, insuring shipment when wanted. (Send for Catalogue.)

BARRED AND BUFF ROCKS.

I have won the past season at the following shows: Fitchburg, Mass., Stamford, Conn., South Framingham, Mass., Manchester, N. H., New Bedford, Mass. The above Barred Cockerels were all sired by 3d cockerel, 1903, Madison Square Garden, New York winner, 63 cockerels in this class. Reliable Poultry Journal February, 1903, liked this cockerel above all others in the show. I have a few cockerels sired by above cockerel for sale from $4.00 upwards. Standard weight of very even color, barred well all over. If you want to improve your blood these cockerels are what you want. Money returned if birds don't suit you. I have had my pens mated up by one of the leading Poultry Judges in America—4 pens headed by high scoring cockerels. I have also one pen of Buff Rocks. For the cockerel in this pen and two pullets I gave Mr. Higgins, of Orange, Mass., $75. I have not many sittings to dispose of therefore have your orders booked early. My eggs will be from same pens as I breed from myself. Choicest Eggs $2.00 a sitting.

Wild Waterfowl

Breeding, Feeding and Management.

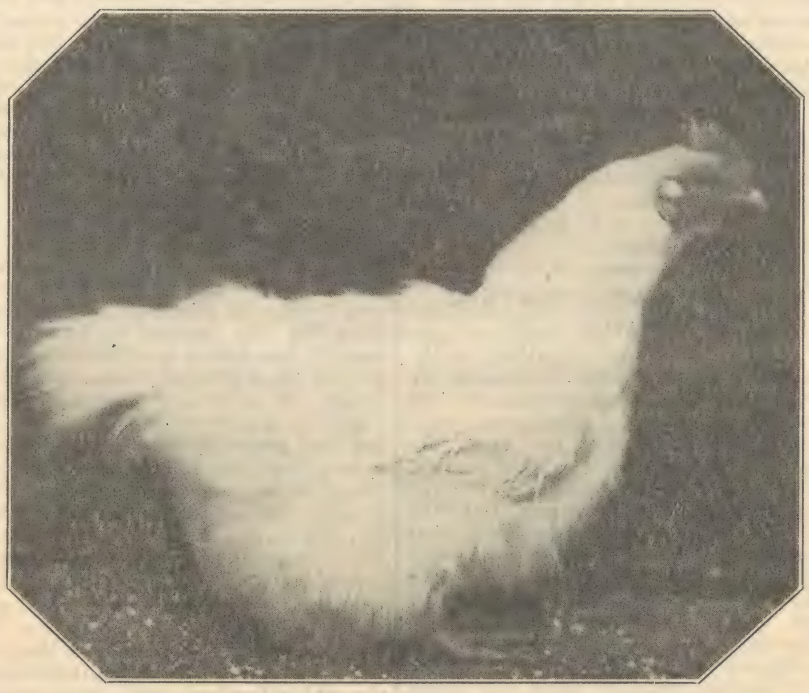
By an Expert.

My hobby for a long time was water fowl; and as I believe many persons who have the same taste are prevented from indulging in it by the idea that it must involve a great expense, I have determined to note down my proceedings.

Neither a lake nor a river is requirer, nor a very large nor deep pond. I had in a garden a piece of water about 14 yards long by 4 yards broad. When I first took to wild fowl it had sloping grass banks on every side. The consequence was, my ducks were often drowned.

It may sound strange to drown a duck, and still more so to drown one in such a small pond; but a duck will drown as readily as a fowl in certain circumstances. And as I wish to put my ideas in a friendly and chatty way before my readers, I may as well give my theory as I go.

Ducks swim so long as the outer feathers are firm, close, and well oiled. The down between the feathers and the skin remains dry, warm, and light; but when from any cause this down becomes wet, cold, and heavy, the bird does not sink, but is like a waterlogged vessel—it floats about on the water, getting gradually deeper and deeper in it, till at last its head droops under the surface, and the body floats about with just the back above the water.



Ducks sometimes quarrel, and then the beaten bird gets drowned unless it can escape. It cannot if the banks are steep or beetling; every time the beaten bird tried to escape to land, which it always seeks to do, the victor pursues it and pulls it down. An outlet must be provided, and the proper way is to cut at each side of the pond, through the bank, a slant that comes rather below the level of the water at its end.

This will form a shallow 2ft or 3ft in length, and any bird by its means can readily leave the water. If, farther, it is well gravelled it forms a scour, very useful as a feeding place. If ducks are fed in deep water much of the food it lost by sinking to the bottom.

"I am quite unable to give any guess at the age of ducks, or the period in their lives when it may be said of them: "It cannot be expected they should last much longer." They are gifted with tolerable longevity.

I know an instance of a pair of Dun birds breeding after being fifteen years on a piece of water. Of course they die sometimes of disease or of old age, but with painstaking death will seldom occur.

With wild fowl as with other pets, overfeeding is a great evil. Heavy

WHITE FLUFF PULLET.
Bred and owned by Dr. C. H Gallagher, Slaterville Springs, N. Y

fat birds doze listlessly on the water, or squat on the grassy bank and will hardly move, while the sufficiently but moderately fed will flutter along the surface to the accustomed feeding place the moment the attendant is seen basket in hand. They scramble after the pieces of bread thrown upon the surface till it is alive with them; and when the water is clear the red-headed Pochard may be seen swimming under water after the pieces that sink.

Many a happy hour have I spent in a small summer-house that overlooked my pond and my favorites. The Water was enclosed by a wattle fence, as I found out that duck will only not remain tame if they have the semblance of liberty, but they will become wild if they have scope or the means of hiding. There was very little covert on my pond; but I encouraged some flags and rushes at one spot. These were duly appreciated.

The ducks being thoroughly pinioned they could not fly, and I was, therefore, secure; accidents or the acts of ducks' foes excepted.

I was very particular in seeing that they were sufficiently pinioned. The pinion, according to the generally received opinion, is that which is also termed the flight, and is composed of five feathers. When these are removed the bird can fly almost as well without it as with it. This flight, or these five feathers, grow from this last joint of the wing; below this and nearer to the body is another joint, this is not enough. Below this will be found the spur of the wing, an exceedingly hard and pointed bone projecting from the third joint.

If a sharp knife be put under this spur, with the edge resting on the wing, and the back of it be struck a good tap with a stout stick, the operation is complete. The amputated part flies off, the wound is protected by the spur, and the bird being thrown into the water, the cold application stays the bleeding. It feeds immediately, and except that its flying is spoiled, it is not in any way affected by the operation.

I forgot to say that the pinion must rest on a post or the corner of a stool or table when the operation takes place. Two persons are necessary. The real operator should hold the bird by the wing firmly close to the body with the left hand, and also keep the wing fully spread out by placing the thumb behind the principal joint in the middle of the wing. The right hand should hold the knife so lightly on the wing that it does not hurt the bird or cause it to struggle, and the blow being given the operation is complete.

By way of warning, I advise a judicious choice of the person who strikes the blow. The knuckles of the right hand of the operator are in dangerous proximity to the back of the knife, and if the stick used as a mallet be a long one, and the blow awkwardly struck, it often descends on the knuckles instead of the weapon. My eyes even now flash fire at the recollection of it.

I have kept the beautiful Carolina duck, with its variegated crest, its white-spotted ruddy breast, its delicately barred sides, rich with metallic lustre, its red eye and bill; the jolly-looking red-headed Pochard, with its red head and neck, black breast, grey body, and red eyes; the black-headed with its graceful crest and sharp-cut division of black and white plumage, with unique color and gloss of head, set off by the bright golden eyes; the many-colored Shoveller, with its curious bill; the pretty little Teal, only thought little of because he is common; the Garganey Teal, substituting a white for the azure stripe on the head of the common, and having its beautiful blue and white streamers; the graceful Pintail, with its taper neck striped with white, and its long tail; the cheerful Widgeon, with his white-patched wing and merry-looking head; the grave tortoiseshell-colored Sheldrake, with his red biil.

All these I have kept, and save the Carolinas they are the cheap sorts within the reach of everyone. I coveted the Mandarins, but I could not afford them. They all knew me, and I was never tired of watching them; but if there was a time when I took more than ordinary interest in them, it was on a summer's evening after a very hot day. Even in the small place like that I possessed, and although they were comparatively tame, they were yet true to instinct. They hide as much as possible during the day, and they feed at night.

So, in a state of nature, flocks of ducks are seen asleep on the water in the midst of a large lake. They can see the approach of danger on any side; but at night they come inland to feed. Half an hour before twilight all my birds were on the qui vive. They awoke from their sleepy state, they searched every corner, they chased every insect, they thrust their bills into every hole. I sat in the arbor with my pets, a retriever, a terrier, very often a sandy cat, and last, not least, two little girls. One was found of everything that had life, the other did not know a Sheldrake from a blackbird.

The little girl, who was an amateur, carried the basket, and it contained odd scraps of bread. The ducks were holding their conversation. None but those who have noticed it are aware of the continual cackle or calling of wild fowl, and it is not addressed at random, but to each other. While they are scattered about on the water one at one end will start across to the other, and commence an animated conversation, accompanied by strange "bobbings around" and curious antics; others will join at once.

The Carolina drake sets out his feathers and drives on the water like a swan. The Widgeon throws up his head and whistles as he goes. When all were fully occupied we used to throw in a few pieces of bread, then came the scramble. The pieces were purposely large, and thrown one by one. As soon as one was secured, the fortunate possessor was chased by every other bird, and what with losses by the way, and open robbery by nibbling, seldom secured more than the morsel held in the bill. This was kept up so long as the bread lasted, and then a few grains of corn were thrown in, and the Dun birds and tufted ducks dived for them, and at last the birds left the water and came up to our feet to pick up the crumbs that had fallen.

These ducks knew every member of my family. They were never ill or out of condition. They cost little to keep, and were an endless amusement. There was one drawback—they did not breed, at least not with me.

Some years since a friend of mine had some Teal and some Sheldrakes given to him. He had no pond in his garden, and therefore put them in his rickyard, where there was a piece of water. The Sheldrakes bred at once, any being unable to burrow (the Burrow duck) in the clayey soil, they did so into a hayrick, where thep laid and hatched. The Teal did the same in a small patch of rushes. This was singular, as many try for years and never succeed in breeding a bird.—M. T., in Poultry, England.

OLD STYLE ENGLISH GAME.

Of late years in England the old style pit game fowls have been out again and have become popular among fanciers, I take it. Before the show game—otherwise known as "exhibition game—"came on, the English game fowls were all of the fighting or pit type and aside from their pit qualities were handsome and otherwise meritorius fowls. They were short of leg, symmetrical and full plumaged and were bred in a variety of pretty colors, as black reds, brown reds, yellow and Silver Duckwings, Piles, Spangles, Dominiques, Duns and so on. English cockers have always kept a few of the old sort and when a few years back there was a demand for these birds by the fancy they were at once forthcoming. But since they have been made a show variety and have begun winning show prizes, show authorities claim that many have lost the original quality of gameness, without which the old style English pit game becomes only a pit game in appearance. However, some are yet true in blood and retain all of the original characteristic gameness with the rest. About fifteen years ago I got hold of a strain of the old sort imported by a neighbor, Mr. Sam D. McMillan, who had two cocks and a dozen hens brought over with some honors. I secured a cock and two hens and bred them and have a few specimens about yet. These were both black red and brown red in color, but all alike in type. They are very pretty, good layers and absolutely game in battle it seems. They are of medium size and a splendid kind for the farm, being active and great foragers; the hens esuecially vigilant in the care of their broods. It has so happened that I have secured two other strains of old English game, and these are in shape practically like those described. One of these latter strains of the "Earl Derby" breed, the other what is known as the "Surry Tassel" or "Shropshire Red." The Derbies are black red with white legs, and this stock is said to be of the real Derby breed and not like many of the so-called Derbies imported. This stock was imported by Horace Baxter, the Vermont cocker, who with the help of a cousin in England got hold of the genuine article from a race horse man and cocker over there. These fowls have the characteristic white in sickles and wing flights of cocks, as all true Derbies do. They are strictly game fowls and very handsome, good general purpose fowl on the farm.

The Surry Tassels in my possession are of two strains, one imported by the late Ide Rossiter, the other by Col. Baxter. The Surry Tassel is a ginger breasted brown red, with blue legs and a slight tassel on the head. They are an old kind in England, having been bred, as have the Derbies, for over a hundred years. They are very rare in America and for that reason if for no other I prize them highly. Mr. Baxter says they have been his favorite pit kind. The hens are wonderful layers and very sprightly and neat, being of a cinnamon brown color, the back feathers slightly traced or penciled with black. I am trying to get out quite a number of the Surreys this season and hereafter intend keeping quite a yard of them. The three strains mentioned are practically the same as those now so popular in England, but these are true pit fowl from the yards of English cockers, while some shown at the English shows are old style English game only in appearance.

THE HISTORY OF DOMESTIC FOWLS.

Resuming our notes relatives to the Roman poultry, we find Columella entering next upon a description of the fowls which are most desirable.

"It is not advisable," he says, "to buy any but such as are very prolific. They should be of a plumage very red or tawny, with black wings. Let the whole be of the same color, or a near approach to it. But, if of any other color, let white fowls be avoided, for they are tender and less robust; neither is it easy to find specimens of them that are prolific. Let the breeding hens be of a choice color, of robust body, square framed, large and broad breasted, large headed, with small, erect, bright red comb, white ears, and of those thus characterized let the largest be procured, and not with an equal number of claws. Those hens are reckoned of the purest breed which are five-clawed, but so placed that no cross spurs arise from the legs; for she which has this male-like appendage is rarely fruitful, and when she does sit breaks the eggs with her sharp claws.

"The cocks should be lustful; colored like the hens; with the same number of claws, but taller; proud of carriage; combs erect and blood-red; eyes brown or black; beak short and hooked; ears very large and very white; wattles looking whiter from their shining, and hanging down like a hoary beard; the fearthers of the neck or mane varying, but preferably from yellow to golden, and spreading down over the shoulders; the breast broad and muscular; the wings brawny, like arms; the tail lofty, and composed of a double row of arching feathers, alike on each side; the thighs ample, and usually thickly clothed with coarse feathers; legs sturdy, not long, but armed as it were with dangerous spurs. Even when neither prepared for fighting, nor for the triumph of victory, their temple should be shown to be highly generous, haughty, active, watchful, and given to crow often, also not easily alarmed; for sometimes it will be needful for them to repel attacks and to protect their conjugal flock."

Such were the Roman narrator's models of what he considered a most superior hen and cock. The management of fowls adopted by the Romans, and the construction of their poultry houses closely resembled those adopted by ourselves; but for the present we shall pass over these particulars, and proceed to trace the history of the domestic fowl in our own country.

When Julius Caesar invaded Britain, about fifty-five years before the birth of our Saviour, it is curious that he found that, although their religions would not permit the inhabitants to eat either the hare, the goose, or the hen, yet they kept them all "as well for novelty as for variety" (Caesar's Comm., 1st V., C. 10)—a description which means, if it mean anything, that they bred them for the mere pleasure of breeding them and varying the breed.

The Romans probably weakened the projudice against eating the domestic fowl, and as it is well known that they strove to improve the British farming and gardening, so it is no more than reasonable to conclude that poultry shared in the progressive effort. As already observed, our Dorking shares the five-toed excellence that characterized the most esteemed fowls of Rome.

When the Anglo-Saxons overran Britain in the course of the fifth and sixth centuries, they would still further sweep away the poultry prejudice, for they not only bred them, but made them a prominent article of food. We have more than one testimony upon this point, but the most curious one is found in the details of the rent reserved for land let in those days of money scarcity. For example, we find that one noble Saxon dame received annually out of her lands 40 ambra of malt, a full grown ram, 4 wethers, 240 loaves of bread, one weight of bacon and cheese, 4 fothers of wood, and 20 hen fowls. In the laws of the Saxon King Ina ,the amount to be rendered was fixed as follows:—Every ten hides of land shall furnish ten vessels of honey, 300 loaves of bread, 12 ambra of Welsh ale, 30 ambra of clear ale, two full grown rams, 10 wethers, 10 geese, 10 hens, 10 cheeses, a full ambra of butter, 5 salmon, 20lb of fodder, and 100 eels.—(Turner's Anglo-Saxons, III., 602.)

The Normans in conquering England caused little change in its farming, either in the tilling of the ground or in the management of livestock. We shall, therefore, pass over all the intervening period, and shall next resume the subject where we find poultry-keeping a subject dwelt upon in our national literature.—Poultry, England.

Eggs—Receipts for week, 117,300 cases. While the price has changed nne, the warmer weather is having effect in the quality and closer candling is in order. Well known marks and exceptionally fancy offerings bring full market; all others are being shaded, as to condition. Fancy, selected, stated, quoted at 20c; mixed colors, same quality,19c; western fancy, 18½; southern, 14½ to 17c; duck eggs, 25c; goose eggs, 35c per dozen.

Poultry—31 cars live and 11,000 packages dressed arrived in this market for the week. Fowls quoted at 13c, live; chickens, 12½; turkeys, live, 12c; fresh killed, 15 to 16; dressed fowls, 13 to 13½; chicks, 16 to 17 for fancy offerings, down to 12c for poorer stock; capons, 8lbs. of over, 20c per lb., lighter weights, 18c.; broilers, picked dry, 20c, scalded 18c; spring ducks, Long Island, Penn., Va. and Eastern, 23c per lb.

The smiles of old Sol has made those covered runs, described a couple of weeks since a superfluous commodity, so far as side coverings are concerned. The roof, however, will pay for itself every month during the summer as a protection from sudden showers, the summer sun, and a quick place under which to hide from the depredations of hawks and crows, bent on dining on spring chickens.

We copy from a New York daily:

A Washington Market poultryman is telling his fellow stallmen about a complaint made by a fair customer. "I am disappointed in you," she murmured. "You sold me that chicken for a roaster and it proved to be a fowl. You shall make good the difference in price on the next bill, else I shall do my trading elsewhere." "I beg a thousand pardons, madame," he pleaded, "but are you sure it was a fowl?" "Of course. In dressing it cook found seven eggs. A fowl, you know, is a very old hen too tough for the table and only fit to lay tough eggs."

How to educate the uneducated is a tough proposition.

This brings to mind a question asked me recently. A prospective egg buyer walks in the dairy and seeing a basket of eggs labelled "12 for 25c" asks, Why do you give only twelve for a quarter when Butterfat down the street gives fourteen of the best eggs for a quarter. I explained to her that the quality of his best was only able to command 22½ cents a dozen, while mine, owing to the short interval from time these eggs were laid until I was able to expose them for sale, as compared with Butterfat's store eggs, brought the better price. After making the purchase the customer admitted she had found my eggs to be better than the others, which goes to show the only true way of settling the question of supremacy is by comparing each with the other.

The same rule applies to buying winners on the records they make at shows, and on what value their owners place on them. Each individual breeder who places an adv. in a poultry paper claims he has the best, and will offer as proof his show winnings. Each is sincere in his claim. The value of A's best may be far below B's and price lower as well. It is for the purchaser to determine which is more worth, as the Dutchman said.

Each, if he values his business integrity, will give one hundred cents on a dollar in value.

A scorecard as evidence of a chicken's right to championship claims, is worth about as much as a yesterday's street car transfer. A bird may score 95 in Omaha under Judge Easyboy, and others may reach 92 under Judge Hardcutter at Stamford, but the supreme test comes when they run up against each other on neutral ground. there can be no evasion, the judge must decide which is the champion of his class, and tne winner's statement is bound to carry more weight under such circumstances than all the scorecards in the country.

This paragraph is for the benefit of the fellow who asked whether Howell is pro or anti on the scorecard question. Comparison every time for me.

HATCHING BUFF LEGHORNS LATE

Wm. J. Howell, Geneseo, N. Y.

While the oldest and most experienced breeder of Buff Leghorns will admit that the half of breeding that breed has never been told by all the breeders together, we all experience little things which if brought together in one volume would be very helpful to us as well as beginners with this valuable breed.

Mr. E. P. Shepard, who died several years ago, once told the writer that some of the finest Buff Leghorns shown at the mid-winter shows were those hatched after June 15. We could not understand why it was, but decided in the summer of 1900 to try it. On July 4 of that year we had quite a large hatch, on July 17 another good lot. We showed some of these birds at Rochester, N. Y., Jan. 11 to 17, 1901, and won 1st young pen, 1st cockerel, and 1st pullet, and the first cockerel hatched July 17 weighed 6¼ pounds, and had such peculiar stubby points on comb (looking as if they had been frosted) that we were informed by a gentleman who saw them judged (we not being present) that if it had not been for the very small spurs the judge would have taken him for a cock. Chicks hatched in March or April of the same year were in no condition to exhibit at that show, notwithstanding they were from the same stock and just as well raised. Now to the point: the early chicks took on part of their adult feathering during the high, hot bleaching suns of July and August, and the early feathers faded, while those which came later did not, leaving a mealy, mottled appearance of surface color, while those hatched in July put on all their adult feathers during the fall and winter months when the sun was farther south, and not so penetrating, and much of the time behind clouds.

Now this little experience would teach us that in buff color perhaps more than any other, plenty of shade is absolutely necessary, and the question will arise with many, What is the quickest shade to grow? The writer had many years of experience in that line, always using fruit trees, pears, plums, peaches, cherries and apples, and finds that under certain conditions the peach tree will make more than double the shade in a given time of any of the above; these certain conditions were plenty of water with soil kept loose about the roots. The moisture part we stumbled on, having peach trees in two yards, near long house we kept water fountains under them, and the same with apple, pear and plum trees in other yards; every time we changed water, which is always three times a day in hot weather, we poured water from these fountains around roots of the trees, and we noticed that all of them more than doubled the growth of other trees in the same yards. We also noticed that the peach trees more than doubled the growth of any of the others which we watered, and we believe the Foster peach can, with plenty of water, be grown faster than any other peach. Our experience covers only light, sandy soil.

The Buff Leghorn Club has issued a 44-page book, which will be sent free to any one asking for it, giving information about those egg machines, the Buff Leghorns.

JERSEY JOTTINGS.

Editor American Fancier:

Business in poultry and pigeons is quite brisk out in our borough lately and if I don't have strict orders at home my better half will sell me out some day.

A colored gentleman who does some gardening for me occasionally, came around one day. He was greatly worried because the preacher's "rooster" next door did up every male chanticleer he could afford to buy and he was desperately anxious to get a game cock to put with his flock and lay for the preacher's rooster. He would risk even to the extent of a dollar to gain this end.

Almost simultaneously came an offer from the green grocer's clerk who has gone into the squab raising business to make a fair exchange, bird for bird, for some imported English carriers, so you see that things are decidedly looking up.

I regret to see in your columns a controversy on the lines of the New York Game Bantam report development. This matter should be settled at once by some one delivering the goods and submitting to arbitration.

On the other hand Messrs. Purdy and Rumbold's contributions promise some innocent entertainment and from the way Mr. Purdy offers to back his sporting blood there might be some American egg contents on before long, and no doubt there would be a rush to get on thewoolsack at the next Madison Square show in order to pick a wing of those redoubtable "Sussex Speckles."

The Dorking is a grand old breed and in my judgment they are not supported at all as they should be in America. I kept them years ago in Canada and they did well there with ordinary good care. This spring I have made a fresh start in a small way with some Silver Grays and chicks hatched in February and early March are thriving remarkably well, considering the weather. They are big, strong and well feathered and I intend to keep a flock of them for domestic purposes and early sitters.

MIDDLETOWN'S SECOND ANNUAL.

The Middlesex County Poultry, Pigeon and Pet Stock Association of Middletown, Conn., established an enviable reputation at their first exhibition held during January of this year. All premiums were paid in full the last day of the show and the association starts off their second year with a snug sum in their treasury—much to the credit of their officers and members. The association will hold its second exhibition on January 10, 11, 12 and 13, 1905, in the town hall, Middletown, Conn., and Judges Nichols and Card, with the addition of a third judge, will do the honor of placing the ribbons. The association will do all to make this their second exhibition a greater success than the first and hope to warrant the support of the fancy, in their their vicinity, however. The officers are: President, Jas. H. Kelsey; vice president, C. R. Corey, Capt. Wm. A. Pease, Geo. G. Whitmore, Thomas Howard; secretary, W. J. Kreft, Middletown, Conn.; asst. sec., Geo. D. Hastings; treas., Frank H. Smith; executive committe, Wm. H. Shute, C. D. Armstrong, A. R. Cruttenden; A. W. Graves, A. L. Bonfrey, Alex. Ferguson.

In our advice regarding the immersion of egg-bound hens in hot water which appeared in our notes last week it should have read "immersed to the thighs," instead of conveying the impression on some that the entire body should be placed under water as might be inferred from reading our former sentence. It is a very good and safe remedy.

Mr. "West Point" is again on earth and renews his poetical, philosophical, readable, caustic and instructive paragraphs in this issue. His "Tabasco Sauce" may be hot stuff, but it furnishes a relish that a continual diet of poultry literature can well stand.

Our old friend "Yakob Pilsener" has also been heard from and will give his Hoboken German squibs now and then. Pilsener has started in the chicken business and instead of confining his remarks to pigeon fanciers principally, will take up the chicken cranks.

A young man or boy with some experience in or willing to learn caring for poultry, can obtain a good position with A. S. Chase, manager of Woodcrest Farm, Rifton, Ulster Co., N. Y. Read the latter's advertisement in "Want" column. We personally know that this is a desirable opening for an ambitious young poultryman, Mr. Chase being an excellent manager to work for.

The illustration on our title page is made from a photograph of a White Fluff pullet owned and bred by Dr. Chas. N. Gallagher, Slaterville Springs, N. Y., and gives as near as is possible by the camera, the silky texture of the plumage.

Two other fine illustrations appear in this issue, both being taken from photographs and are true to life. They form an interesting study for Silver Wyandotte fanciers and as the veteran owner of these birds, Mr. R. F. Alden, writes: "I prefer cuts from photos because they give the birds' defects as well as their good points." The laced wing, breast and top color in male are striking, as it is strong, black lacing in pullet.

The man that claims chickens need no drinking water, should put himself in one of the tight, stuffy and insufferably hot coops they are often compelled to harbor in and go without water for a few hours. He will never be guilty of such a mistaken idea again. To watch chickens make a bee line for the water fountain when released from a night's bondage is a very convincing and humane argument in favor of liquid refreshments.

The great Danbury Fair is scheduled for October 3 to 8. The poultry department will again be in charge of Fred Borman, than whom no abler or more competent superintendent exists. Extra judges will be employed this year, as the exhibits have grown so large in numbers that the services of more than one judge are required in order to get the ribbons up the first day of the show.

An excellent photo-engraving of Messrs. W. S. and H. O. Vosburgh's famous Barred Plymouth Rock hen, "Gilbertina," appears in the fine, special Spring number of the Feathered World, England. This hen is a well-known winner in the east, being first as pullet at New York State Fair, Syracuse, and Stamford, in 1903, and first as hen at Hartford and Stamford, taking the champion prize at former for best cock, cockerel, hen or pullet. This bird is a rare type, being sound in body color, with very narrow, even barring, the cast of plumage being the much desired blue. Beak, legs and shape are correspondingly good. Mr. W. S. Vosburgh has made a study of Barred Rocks and although he exhibits at leading shows, is an amateur and sells neither stock nor eggs. It is a fancy, pure and simple, with him and his young partner.

So some of the "big gun" breeders and exhibitors are trying to get jobs as judges at St. Louis, and thus escape showing there. Foxy Quillers!

We publish Editor Curtis' reply to our squib regarding American Poultry Association judges. We did not base our comments on the paragraph relating to this subject in the forthcoming Standard of Perfection; we simply took up the statements made in another journal by a well known judge. We agree with the Reliable Poultry Journal that "request" and "must" are two very distinct words in their meaning. We further agree that it is desirable for a judge of poultry to be a member of the American Poultry Association, especially if he desires to make a business of judging. What we do object to is: The compulsory intimation that it might be better for his business to join the association. Believing in the "open door" in all things American, we cannot see why a qualified judge should be relegated to the tall timber because he has no desire or inclination to be "wan of us." This is a mighty big country and the freedom of thought and action has not yet been choked off by centralization of government, and we trust never will be. In most of the other respects the article is a very good one.

We regret to note the worry that has taken possession of Editor Robinson's mind, regarding the date when the new Standard is to be published, and also when it should be applied. At the St. Louis meeting of the American Poultry Association, the matter will be fully discussed, and no doubt the time of its application fully determined. Consequently, it is best not to worry or borrow trouble over this matter, especially as the warm days are approaching.

A reader asks: Which is the cheapest coop for Bantams? A piano box. Dr. A. H. Phelps, Glens Falls, N. Y., is the discoverer of that low-priced and serviceable coop and uses many of them for his numerous varieties of Bantams.

Poultry newspaperdom has been treated to all kinds of sensations, personalities, insinuations, maliciousness, libel, sneak thievishness, blackguardism and gross ignorance during the past few months. It must have been one of those muddy waves that hit poultry journalism in the early eighties and left a few scars that never healed. The clouds may have rolled by in some instances of late, but to judge by the renewed attack in one of our contemporaries on the editor of another publication, there will be a hot time in journalistic ranks during the coming summer.

There will be no colored illustrations in the new Standard of Perfection, but there will be the finest collection of black and white pictures of thoroughbred fowls ever found between the covers of a book.

It is an acknowledged fact that certain writers and judges advocate the scorecard simply because it brings them a revenue that comparison fails to do. At heart they are for comparison, and frankly admit it when closely questioned. The pocketbook, however, is mightier than the principle in their case.

It will now be in order for some surgical instrument manufacturer to place upon the market a side-sprig clipper, one that will do the work cleanly and in such a manner that little or no trace can be found of there ever having been a side-sprig on the comb. Some of our professional poultry surgeons and exhibitors do not need such an instrument; they can do the job with a finely sharpened knife or curved scissors. We simply make this statement in good season, as the new Standard will be out next fall, and side-sprigs, by the grace of the majority present at the Rochester meeting, were pronounced a disqualification. Incidentally, the art of faking was encouraged.

When we consider that in many Game Bantams the females have very small side-sprigs on very small combs, and as the males are to be shown dubbed, or minus a comb, the absurdity of this disqualification is apparent. Suppose the grandest little Game Bantam pullet that ever trod the turf was disqualified for a tiny side-sprig, and a loose-feathered, long-backed, fantailed brute of a bird awarded the ribbon? What would the lover of fine Game fowls say? One old hide-bound descendant of Puritan times justified his vote for side-sprig disqualification on the plea that it would prevent the sending out of breeding stock with such defects. That white-whiskered angel of another generation is evidently not in close touch with the modern dealer and showman. The latter's conscience is made up of nine-tenths Para rubber and one-tenth foxiness. Side-sprigs never appear in the birds he sends out. But the fraud, if such it is, is all the greater by the hiding of the defect. The same held good a number of years ago when a clever fakir got rid of a lot of Cochin Bantams that had the fifth toe, by simply removing the offending member, thus making the unsaleable, saleable. Arbitrary laws produce just such conditions; liberal laws appeal to better motives and higher ideals.

The Reliable Poultry Journal for May has a very timely editorial under the caption, "Do We Want Two Associations?" Among other things it remarks:

"To date the national importance of the practical side of the poultry question has been almost wholly neglected, so far as proper organizations is concerned. We believe this condition of neglect will soon be remedied in one of two ways: Either the American Poultry Association will extend its sphere of usefulness by taking up general poultry keeping as a national and state affair, or we shall have another national association, one that will devote itself especially to the utility or practical side of poultry and egg production, and to marketing the product.

"Other countries are doing this, including, for example, England, Denmark and Holland, and these utility organizations are "throwing into the background" the strictly fancy associations. The questions and measures that particularly interest their members are not those that impress the ultra-fancier as being the most important, but they do appeal to the pocketbooks and to the palaates of the people, thus commanding quick recognition, and they are making rapid progress both in membership and satisfactory results. At the same time it is clearly evident that the fancier and the market poultryman have much in common, that, as a matter of fact, their interests are, or should be, inseparable to a large degree.

"In our opinion the American Poultry Association should take charge of and vigorously prosecute both of these important lines of work on a national scale. It should represent both the fancier and the practical or market poultryman. Fancy, or standard poultry without practical or utility value would be a fad indeed—on a par with lap dogs and canary birds. If this were all there is to the poultry business, hundreds, yes, thousands of us who are devoting our lives to the development of the industry, would seek other employment. This is not, therefore, a matter of bantams and pit games, but a question of one of nature's best, most commonly used and most indispensable foods for human use. We are considering one of the corner stones of national wealth."

There is no crying need for two associations. The A. P. A. can handle both ends and do it effectively. The practical must be looked after and there is a fine field for the old association to get in some godd work. The standard of eggs shipped to markets must be raised; better dressed and fattened poultry should prevail; buyers of thoroughbred stock should be protected against advertisers and dealers that do not deliver the goods; dishonest advertisers should be exposed and black-listed; in fact, there are many other matters of vital moment to the poultry industry that could be regulated by the American Poultry Association. But it will take a very firm and determined administration by its officers to break up some of the negligent practices in shipping goods and some of the grave abuses that have crept in the showroom in showing and judging birds.

TABASCO SAUCE.

All right, Mr. Robinhood, just as you say; but let's call it "bean soup."

Bean soup will be more palatable, especially for a man from "Bosting."

By the way, how about that visit to those two old maids? Talk about tomato soup! Gee! Hash of the boarding house renown.

And your "Bosting" show, where is it? In the soup, I presume.

Is it possible that a man of your literary culture reads this stuff? Would have thought that you could invest your time more profitably. Do not be a clam, J. H. Do not fly your kite too high.

Well, wonders will never cease. Just think, we have a philanthropist, a good Samaritan among us by the name of Joy, or some name similar to it.

Wonder how he soft-soaps himself. Talk about modesty! Well, I have lost my breath.

Wonder how much dough Bates got to allow that biography in his sheet?

A little too thick, Mr. Bates, a little too thick.

There were no leaks from the committee of 5.

The president of the A. P. A. got a good ripping up lately. Pay up your bills, Link, or change your address.

I understand Ed. Thompson is training his birds for St. Louis. So is Hawkins, as is also Bradley. Would like to see them come together in a show with birds of their own breeding. Guaranteed, copyrighted and trademarked.

Some one wrote a very interesting article on Cook of England in that journal of renown from the city of culture. Wait till he gets out his papers before you lambaste him. He (Cook) has taught us more than one lesson already.

Get-rich-quick schemes are applicable to poultry as well as any other business. Why not?

Graft!! Do I understand you right, Drev.? Graft in the A. P. A! Never, impossible! In the "good old summertime" (1903) there may have been, but not in Rochester; too cold.

Wish Tom Orr would select me to judge the editors at St. Louis.

Would use the decimal scorecard. Size of head to count 50 points; owner's measurement will not be taken.

Advertise or subscribe in the American Fancier for returns and to get the news. $1 per year in advance.

You won't be sorry; my word for it.

And dear little Heck, he has had to put his fingers in the dough dish. Did you notice the "Successful" for May? My, but it is a corker.

But I guess General Grant can hold his own.

I expected to start a new poultry paper July 1st entitled and copyrighted "The Poultry Scandal," but it looks as if the field is pretty well covered.

Gee! but it looks as if Mr. Buffalo Curtis has been in the borrowing of birds, too. Who hasn't?

He that is free from sin let him cast the first stone.

Did you notice all the stuff that Mr. Farm-Chickens had in about the A. P. A. It's a wonder he wouldn't take a drop.

It is pretty near time for Pierce to take a round out of Curtis.

John Henry Roundabout, with his taffy-colored beard, would make a dandy exponent of the decimal score card for judging. T. E. Orr.

Wonder how Tom Orr and Fred Kimmey get along in the committee of 5?

They loved each other "so much" at the Cleveland meeting, you know.

And Curtis, he naturally would want to run the whole thing.

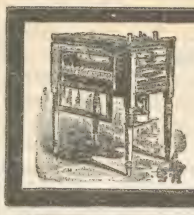
Next comes Link Orr. He does not seem to have brains enough to take the train, according to one Phelps. How he got on the committee is a mystery to all.

And there is "Drevy!" He is another question mark. If anything should queer him getting on a committee it is his action regarding the Felch scorecard at Rochester. Say, Drev., how could you be so cruel? You know that it is the wish that no comparison man should vote on any question concerning the scorecard.

Georgie Howell is doing good work. Wish I could sign my own name.

WEST POINT.

ANTHRACITE TALES.



That the fancy is recruiting many fresh and enthusiastic additions to the ranks, is shown by frequently renewed correspondence on the question of the score card. By the way, Scranton had one of the worst cranks in this connection that has ever yet shown up, to my knowledge. Jass Ackerson three or four years ago was a fairly level-headed bachelor. He became interested in chickens, purchased a flock of R. I. Reds, subscribed for the R. P. J. and soon became a strenuous advocate of the score card. Much of his time was spent in applying the card to his fowls; some were scored to near perfection, while others were severely cut. By the aid of the club standard, Jass finally reached the point where he could safely claim to be able to identify many of his birds with unerring certainty, without consulting their respective cards. Attending the Wallsville fair in September, however, he learned there were better R. I. Reds than he possessed, and at once prepared to raise money on his home. Jass could not brook defeat in any undertaking on which his mind was once set. I might add right here, as preliminary, that it was this indispensible adjunct of a top notch fancier in the character of Jass, that raised the hopes of a few of us that the name of Jass Ackerson might yet shine resplendently with those of Wilcox, Trethaway, Ricker, Tiffany, Rev. Hill and others—simon-pure breeders and successful exhibitors. This local pride in the accomplishments of fanciers of the Wyoming valley was the direct cause, beyond question, of the special effort made by Geo. Pryor and myself to start Jass right, before his substance had been squandered and his future usefulness thus be greatly impaired. George will probably never know the sequel to our well intended efforts, and which I am now about to relate. Shortly before the final windup came, he accepted a tempting business offer and located in Paris, France. Had he remained in the fancy he would beyond a doubt be among the toppers in the Light Brahma fancy to-day. Possessing in a rare degree the faculty of getting to the bottom of things in short order, gifted with indomitable perseverence, a capacity for observing the smallest details, and with plenty of means to carry out his purpose, he was so far advanced in knowledge of a Light Brahma in 1902 that he was able, with less than three years' experience, to pick three of the winning birds before judging at New York that winter. In the beginning George was greatly fascinated with the apparent possibilities of the score card, and spent hundreds of dollars for birds scoring around the 93 mark—the best of these were beaten by Tiffany at Rochester and other places, who offered his winners at much lower figures. George could repeat the standard for Brahmas both forward and backward, and could call off the score card cuts on every bird he owned, but he was finally obliged to declare that there was something about a good bird as whole that no "blankety blank" scale of points would touch. That fall, however, he paid a visit to a couple of leading New England breeders, where he was able to "size up" a few noted birds, with the result I have already noted. I refer nere to this personal experience of George for the purpose of more fully illustrating the practical argument brought to bear on the pig-headed Jass in a desperate attempt to accomplish our hellish design. As a last resort we finally induced him to accompany us to Madison Square Garden early on Monday morning of show week. It was our purpose to show him how quick the leading breeders and exhibitors on their arrival would spot the best birds in the various classes in which they were interested. Offers were accepted or refused on short notice at figures calculated to make a simple R. I. Red fancier stare, but Jass would only insist that great risks were being taken on unscored stock. One exhibitor informed him that a score card was an awful nice thing for some purposes, but that he would not give $5 for the score card of any bird he could not first see. The peculiar nature of Jass's mind only grew more set with every new proof of defeat. There were intervals, it is true, in which we had reason for hope that we might yet succeed, when our buoyant feelings would be miserably quashed as the result, perhaps, of some nicely written classic on the theory and practice of scoring in its relation to the protection and higher education of the unsophisticated amateur, appearing in the "Missouri Fowl Grower," or the "Unreadable Poultry Jackasses," the product of some doctor or professor who wouldn't know a hoot owl from a chicken hawk, or who never showed a winning bird not produced from purchased stock or eggs. Later on at a time when the Ides of spring were preparing to disrobe and drop into the lap of the 4th of July and Jass was unable, in the nature of things, to practice his favorite pastime of scoring, he was frequently observed wandering about with a sickle feather from the tail of a favorite R. I. Red cock sticking in the crown of his hat, and it began to be whispered among the boys that he had a "shingle off." The end came shortly after at the firemen's convention, when Jass was discovered by some of the boys trying to locate his best girl in the crowd by means of a score card and a scale of points. While engaged in adding up the cuts on several cards he had made, it appears that his rival came along and spotted the girl at a glance, conducted her over to the office of Alderman Kasson, where they were happily married. From details furnished later by a relative we learned that the young lady had been attending one of those fashionable boarding schools for several months, where games, athletics, etc., are taught. She had improved about 2¼ points in condition since Jass had had an opportunity to score her. Failing to agree with the card, he was puzzled and missed her, although it is known that he passed her several times that day. Now, that way it looks to me, if Jass, recognizing the prime quality of the goods, had first married the girl and then afterwards felt disposed to apply the card to her, it could have been done with a far better knowledge of the required cuts, and the total result as a whole have been determined with far greater accuracy. I would suggest as a moral to this sad tale, that in solving a difficult problem always begin at the right end.

New Breeds of Fowls.

The Merits of Anconas and Orpingtons Described

BY G. BRADSHAW.

[Government Expert in N. S. Wales, Australia.]

Mr. A. J. Lurcock, of Lambert Grange, Parramatta North, is one of the oldest breeders of prize stock in this state, nearly every variety of fowls having received his special attention during the past twenty-five years, and as a poultry judge at the shows in this state and Victoria his repute is of the highest. Mr. Lurcock, reading about the boom in Anconas in England, and their great laying properties, at once realized what I have often reported about new breeds of fowls, namely, those who are in the boom first make the most money out of it, and early in 1899 determined to have the honor of bringing out the first Anconas to Australia, and his experience in all classes of farm stock had long since convinced him that the best are always the cheapest, hence when he gave his commission to Mr. E. P. Chance, of Edgbaston, England, he selected one of the most successful breeders and exhibitors at that time. Mr. Lurcock's experience is as follow: "I believe I was the first importer of Anconas from England, and have kept them now for nearly three years. I have no desire to depreciate the qualities of an other breed of fowls, but I must say of the Anconas, that in all my experience I have never found their equal as layers, and this in the face of the fact that I am in a most exposed position, right on the top of a hill. I have found no difficulty in rearing the chickens. They are very hardy, and grow quickly, the pullets often beginning to lay at four months' old. I have had very little trouble keeping them confined. I usually tie one wing when putting them in the breeding yards, and after a few days there is no further trouble, but if running in a large yard they are a bit afraid of strangers, and will scoot away on the approach of anyone strange to them. The eggs compare well with Leghorns, being a shade larger than those laid by the Browns. The demand has been very fair for both eggs and fowls, in this state, Queensland, Tasmania, and New Zealand, and I think when they become more generally known they will be more sought after as a profitable variety, that is if breeders do not sacrifice their laying qualities for show points, which I do not intend to."

From the above it will be seen that Mr. Lurcock's experience with the breed in Australia is exactly like that of its several English advocates earlier referred to in this article. The birds are more than generous layers of eggs larger in proportion to the size of the fowls. They are a little wild, but this, as is seen, can be easily controlled. A noticeable property is that of the very early age at which many of them commence to lay, many of our present day and more numerously-bred varieties or breeds not commencing until they are double this age. However, further reference on this very important point is reserved for the chapter on Anconas as egg producers. The important subject of sacrificing the laying properties for show points suggested by the writer is also deferred for later consideration.

Mr. Ben Pryor, of Greta, who for the past few years has been an exhibitor of prize fowls,and now a prominent breeder of Anconas, contributes as follows: "In December, 1899, I decided to try Anconas, and accordingly placed an order for a good unrelated pen with Mr. W. Cook, of Orpington, Kent. The birds arrived at the end of March, 1900. I have found them very good layers of fine white eggs, over the average size, much larger than the Orpingtons,which are bigger birds. They certainly are a very frightened fowl, but still, if treated quietly, they can be made to almost eat out of one's hand. To my mind, they possess all the characteristics of the Leghorn—in fact, might be called Spangled.Leghorn. I have found a very ready sale for both birds and eggs, so much so that I have never any surplus stock on hand. Both birds and eggs I have supplied to breeders in Tasmania, Victoria, Queensland, and many places in this state. There is no more difficulty in rearing the chickens than that experienced with other breeds. So far, although numerous sales have been made, they have not caught on with the public so much as they deserve; for in addition to being layers of large quantities of fine white eggs, they are good foragers, and on large runs should be very profitable, as they will secure most of their food by scratching, as they are not lazy. My birds have been kept in confined yards, which is not an ideal place for this active breed, still they have been most satisfactory, and fully justify what has been previously written of them."

Mr. H. W. Tombs, of Lambridge,Penrith,a successful exhibitor of this breed, says: "I have kept Anconas since shortly after their arrival in this state. I have birds imported from England, and also from the yards of Messrs. Pryor Lurcock. I find them wonderful layers from June to December, my birds last year averaging 165 eggs per hen. Then chickens are hardy, easy to rear, and grow fast, and the pullets commence to lay at an early age. They are good foragers when at liberty; are moderate eaters, and wonderful layers of large white eggs for the size of the fowl. They are not of much account for table purposes, but I have crossed them with Orpingtons and Wyandottes, the progeny being a large plump table bird, and an excellent laying cross. They are a lively and attractive bird, and as egg producers they are hard to beat."

Mr. G. T. Hemsley, of Moss Vale, a successful prize-winner with this breed, says: "I have kept Anconas now for two years, having imported five birds from England. These proved exceedingly fine layers of very large eggs. The chickens from them were hardy and quick growers, maturing about the same time as Leghorns. They certainly are rather wild where running at large, but when confined and handled quietly are as tame as any other breed. Three of the four imported hens laid larger eggs than the average Minorca. As pullets commence to lay early, the eggs at first are rather small, but later on increase to the usual size. There is not a great demand for this breed yet, possibly the color being against them. I have proved them to be excellent layers, particularly towards the end of winter; they laid when even half bare of feathers at moulting time. My opinion is that a good laying strain of this breed will be equal egg producers to either Leghorns or Minorcas."

Mrs. T. Oatley, of Moss Vale, a successful breeder and exhibitor of this and other varieties, writes: "I have kept this variety since the spring of 1900, and commenced with eggs from Mr. Ben Pryor, birds from Mr. Lurcock, and have also Mr. Tombs' strain. My experience of them is that they are splendid layers of large white eggs in spring, and right through the summer and autumn, and fair winter layers. I have found no trouble whatever in rearing the chickens, if kept out of the damp. My pens are 2 ft. 6 in. palings, topped with 3-ft. wire netting, which they never attempt to fly over unless a stranger enters the pen. As they are very nervous, I always attend to them myself, and move amongst them as quietly as possible,so that they may become used to one person,otherwise they will fly like magpies. Taken all round, they lay larger eggs than the Leghorn; in fact, I have some that lay eggs larger than the Leghorn! in fact, I have some that lay eggs quite equal to the Minorca in size. There is not a great demand for the birds or eggs so far. I, however, certainly think they are a class of bird that will take on, as it takes very little to keep them, for they are excellent foragers. They not only scratch the surface of the pen, but will turn it over for 15 to 18 inches deep; and although often supplied with green cut bone, they do not seem to appreciate it like other fowls."

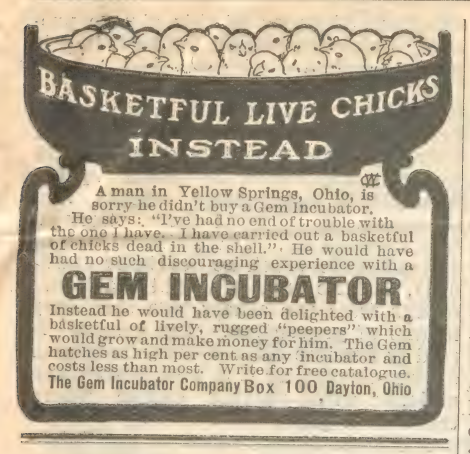
CALLED "UN-AMERICAN."

"Another matter that seems to have afflicted some with the virulent form of disease, known as A. P. A. judgiasticus, is: That all judges must be members of the American Poultry Association in order to judge at poultry exhibitions. This is about the most un-American piece of business ever sprung on an intelligent public."—Editor Drevenstedt in American Fancier, March 5th issue, page 4.

The foregoing has reference to a paragraph that will appear in the new Standard, as one of several rules and recommendations that have been formulated for the guidance of poultry associations that recognize and use the Standard of Perfection. Said paragraph read as follows:

"Poultry associations at whose exhibitions the American Standard of Perfection is used are requested to give the preference to judges who are members of the American Poultry Association. Judges who are members of the national body are accredited thereby to the extent of being in good standing and it is reasonable to conclude that they will apply properly the law of this association as contained in its standard."



The reader will note that Editor Drevenstedt is in error in stating that henceforth "all judges must be members of the American Poultry Association in order to judge at poultry exhibitions." The provision to which he refers merely says poultry associations "are requested to give preference to judges who are members of the American Poultry Association." "Must" and "requested" have radically different meanings in this connection. We deny that it is "un-American" for the American Poultry Association to seek, by reasonable means, to improve and extend its organization, to insure a proper application of its Standard and to certify to the ability and good standing of the men who are to apply the Standard law.

The paragraph quoted herewith from the rules and recommendations to poultry associations contains what impresses us as being a sufficient reason why all associations that use the Standard of Perfection should be "requested" to give the preference to judges who are members of the national body. It says that they "are accredited" to an extent, which, in our opinion, is a fact of importance. It is to be regretted that we haven't a larger number of competent judges. The present supply is insufficient. It is to be regretted also that our best judges vary so widely in their opinions and work. We believe the illustrated Standard will accomplish a good deal in the way of bringing our judges closer together, resulting in better and more uniform work. But aside from all this, we hold that every poultry judge who makes his living, or part of it, by applying the Standard of Perfection should be a life member of the American Poultry Association. There is no reasonable excuse for his withholding his membership. If for any reason he is so much out of sympathy with the aim and work of the association that he has "conscientious scruples" against joining, then he ought not seek engagements to apply the Standard of Perfection and charge money for doing the work.

The value and importance of organization are acknowledged by all who have had experience in work of this kind. Without proper organization little can be accomplished. In our opinion the above recommendation to poultry associations who use the Standard of Perfection and conduct their exhibitions under its provisions and law is a step in the right direction. It is conservative in the extreme. Many will claim it does not go far enough. We do not think it does. Our goal in this matter is to have accredited judges—certificated judges, if you please, and we should like to see the matter followed up quite sharply so that the average work and reputation of our judges may be considerably improved.

The recommendation above quoted was not a case of sudden conversion. It is not the result of "snap judgment." Section 1 of Article III. of the Constitution and By-Laws of the American Poultry Association provides as follows: "The members of this association shall consist of such persons as are approved by the executive committee," etc. This is part of what was meant by the use of the words, "judges who are members of the national body are accredited thereby to the extent of being in good standing," etc.

Section 1 of Article IV. of the Constitution further provides: "Every state having five life members shall be entitled to one member upon the executive committee and every state having ten life members shall be entitled to two members on the committee," etc. This distributes the responsibility for the make-up and conduct of the executive committee, and it is this committee that is to approve the application of each judge who seeks to become a member of the association. Section 1 of Article VI. of the Constitution then clinches the matter in this way: "The executive committee shall have the power to expel or restore any member for causes, by a vote of three-fourths of the members present."

Speed the day when the executive committee will do this work in a manner best calculated to build up the association, to increase its usefulness, extend its influence and thus augment its reputation for efficient, helpful, far-reaching work in behalf of the poultry industry in all branches. We admit that the association to date has been too much of a social affair. Politics and sentiment have been permitted to mismanage and dictate until we are told that it is "un-American" for the association to presume to say that its soul is its own, that its law should be applied by men who have interest enough to ask for membership and who are reputable enough to be accepted as members.

We cannot have an efficient, worthwhile organization without rules and regulations. We claim it is both right and wise that men who are friendly to the association, to its aim and its purposes should enforce the few rules that are necessary to its existence and proper usefulness. It is reasonable and right that all poultry associations that use the Standard of Perfection, thereby recognizing its provisions, should acknowledge a degree of allegiance to the general association, to its objects and authority. The numerous local organizations are working largely in common with the national body and it is little enough for the American Poultry Assoc'n to expect all judges regularly engaged in the work to join its ranks, thus contributing the weight of their example and personal influence to the good of the general cause.

Furthermore, every poultry organization, no matter how large or how small, that wishes to conduct a poultry show in a uniformly systematic manner, that wishes to occupy a secure footing in its dealings with exhibitors and with the public generally, can very well afford to meet the request of the national body to the extent of giving the preference to judges who are members of the American Poultry Association, and who, therefore, are amenable to its executive committee in cases of dishonesty or other disreputable conduct. If we are so thin-skinned and so lacking in oneness of purpose that the cry of "un-American" is to frighten us away from a step so conservative as to "recommend" that poultry associations that recognize and use the Standard of Perfection shall give the preference to such poultry judges as are sufficiently up-to-date, and who believe firmly enough in the industry to join an association that has stood as the national representative of this industry for more than a third of a century, then we are weak-kneed indeed and would better turn the whole affair over to a later generation. It is full time the American Poultry Association undertook something more serious than to meet once or twice a year, dish out the offices to a dwindling circle, of "aye, aye sirs," adopt two or three obituary resolutions and then adjourn.

There is plenty of talent among the members of the American Poultry Association to do the work at hand and do it well. What is needed first is revenue—then a plan of action. Both will be forthcoming. Ten thousand copies of the revised and illustrated Standard will be sold within three hundred and sixty-five days following the date on which the first lot are delivered by the printers. The receipts from this number will place the association back on its feet, financially. An additional five thousand copies will be sold the second year—a secretary who thus will be enabled (and required) to devote practically all of his time to furthering the interests of the general association by carrying out well-considered plans that will make it a power for good, working through local associations. The general association can make no better use of its surplus revenue, as derived from the sale of Standards and membership fees. We repeat that a plan will be forthcoming. It will not be a one-man affair, but the result of the best thought and combined efforts of numerous earnest members who to-day recognize the importance of the work at hand and plainly see the necessity of a more far-reaching and representative organization.—Reliable Poultry Journal.

GAPES.

As we have recently had many inquiries as to this ailment, we give our reply prominence. Gapes is a disease of youth, and attacks adult fowls as seldom as the whooping cough attacks old people. It generally makes its appearance when the chickens are between four and eight weeks old, and rarely, if ever, has it been known to attack birds over four months of age.

It is not a new disease, but one which has been known in connection with poultry, partridges, pheasants, and other birds for centuries. Opinions differ as to the actual origin of gapes, but there is no doubt concerning the symptoms, and the exciting cause of the symptoms. The chicks are observed to open their mouths to the fullest extent, and "gape," and have a choking cough. Later, the cough increases in frequency, the gaping becomes almost constant, and unless aid be given the chicken ultimately chokes and expires.

The cause of the distress is the presence of red worms at the root of the windpipe. When the first come they are very small (not larger than a thread), and have a very bright, almost a varmillion, color. They have, however, been taken out of chickens so large as to fill the windpipe half its length. Two worms—a longer and a shorter one—are frequently found joined together, the point of junction being about the middle of the longer worm. The largest worms are about the thickness of a stout pin. They are very active, and it is the tickling caused by their constant motion that causes the short, dry cough and the gaping, in the futile endeavor to get rid of the pests.

There are divers cures and operations, but wherever the disease appears some chickens always die, and it would be well, before operating on the others, to open and examine the windpipe of one of the dead chickens. If the disease that has caused death is gapes the worms adhering to the mucous membrane of the windpipe will be seen; but if these are not present then death has been due to some other disease.

The original treatment recommended and followed by those who, generations back, gave the disease its expressive name, was to take a hen's feather, stripped within an inch of its extremity, to place it down the windpipe, twist it sharply round, and withdraw it suddenly. We have followed a similar plan of this when operating on turkey poults and strong chickens. We have found it advantageous to moisten the feather in spirits of turpentine before using it. The turpentine kills the worms—the feather must only be moistened, not soaked, with it, as a drop going into the lungs may be fatal to the chick—and the operation causes the birds to sneeze, and throw them up; that is, we may add, if performed by an old hand.

A difficulty is sometimes experienced by novices by getting the feather down the windpipe,but by holding the chick's beak upon with the finger and thumb of the left hand applied from behind, and pressing the throat of the chick slightly with one of the other fingers of the same hand, the opening of the windpipe can be clearly seen just behind the tongue, and down this the feather must be gently pushed as far as it will easily go.

Another method is to pass down horsehair loops, twist them, and withdraw them. But neither of these methods is very effectual, as it always leaves some worms behind, and they increase and multiply. The operations have to be performed with great care, as the feather is often pulled down the gullet, which is useless, and with small chickens, which are most seriously affected, it is altogether out of the question.

Still other methods of cure that are recommended is to place the chicks in a box of chips soaked in turpentine, or to give them a little piece of bread with some turpentine on it. Carbolic acid fumes are also advised by some. The best plan of managing the administration of these is to confine the chicks in an air-tight house or large box, and place over a small petroleum stove an old kettle or other similar vessel with about one-fourth part of crude carbolic acid and three parts water. The boiling fluid will give off a strong carbolic vapour and cause the chicks to cough violently. This process, however, requires careful supervision, or the carbolic fumes may become too powerful for the chickens, and they may succumb.

On this account a cure was required that could be used without interfering with the windpipe, and would also be simple and effectual. It could only be done by using something sufficiently powerful to pervade the system, and to reach by its odor both the seat and the cause of the disease. Nothing that we have used have we found to do it so effectually as camphor, given in pills of the size of a grain of wheat at intervals. That which is given to a fowl or pheasant must of necessity remain some time in the crop in close proximity to the windpipe. As soon as the odor reaches the worms they die, and the disease ceases with their death.

Whenever premonitory symptoms are observed immediate action should be taken. They may often be arrested by giving the birds no other water to drink than that which is strongly impregnated with camphor, known to our grandmothers as "camphor julep," and believed to be a panacea for most disorders, and, more than that, a preventive. Another good thing to put in the water in the place of camphor is as follows: Dissolve 2ozs of sulphate of iron in sixty drops of sulphuric acid. After it has stood twenty-four hours mix it with two gallons of water. Let it stand two days, and then administer it by putting a teaspoonful to a pint of water.

Another simple remedy was sent to us by a correspondent in 1901. He says: "The following recipe I have used for years, and have never known it fail:—Catch the bird, and put a good pinch of salt right down it throat; if this does not quite effect a cure repeat the dose next day." Although we have not, fortunately, had occasion to try this remedy, we have had letters from other correspondents who have cured chickens of gapes of this simple process, hence our reason for including it in these notes.

It is thought, and we agree with it, that these parasites are gained by drinking bad water. All fowls prefer drinking from a puddle of dirty rain water to any vessel or clean spring water. The opportunity should not, therefore, be afforded them. Scrupulous cleanliness, with a liberal use of disinfectants (such as carbolic powder), and the separation of the affected chicks from the others, are the only means of prevention. The ground is said to become tainted with the germs of this disease, so it is well, where possible, to avoid putting chicks where those with gapes have been.

Old birds do not catch gapes. Chickens recover if they can outlive the worms; but as they never do so unassisted, it is well to feed liberally on bread and ale in order to stimulate them.—Poultry, England.

THE WORLD'S GREATEST GAME BREEDER.

From the Razoo Poultry Journal.

We stopped off at Evergreen Lodge, Holysmoke, AR., to look over the unequalled Games of Mr. Lemonhackle, one of our greatest advertisers, a breeder who sends thousands of eggs and birds to all parts of the world. He started when only six years of age to lay the foundation of his mammoth establishment. By continuous and liberal expenditure of printers' ink, he has succeeded in making thousands of dollars a year. He won hundreds of premiums last fall at such noted shows at Ossopede, Warmset, Coldtong, Graftburg, Fake Centre, Stiffprop, Poolishu, Giftland and Jimhickey. Owing to a bronchial affection he was unable to exhibit at the winter shows. His birds, however, won many prizes for his customers, including a Silver club for the grandest and largest display of Beetle-Green, Crimson-barred Games. He will guarantee all fertile eggs to hatch and can spare a few settings from his new variety, the Plum-colored Oriental Games, at forty-seven dollars a dozen.

to breed the BUFF WYANDOTTE winners if one has the right kind of stock, SUITABLY MATED. It's one thing to secure individuality, but to reproduce or BREED ON, it's absolutely necessary that a specimen's ancestry for A TERM OF YEARS be of the very best of it's time. "Like begets like," OR LIKE ITS ANCESTRY—more often perhaps the latter. What does prove a success from a breeder's standpoint is INDIVIDUALITY BACKED UP WITH A RICH INHERITANCE of first prize winners for many generations. So far, doubtless you agree with me. Now, where better can you find the desired NICKING qualities than from a strain that has been successfully maintained before the public since the origin of the breed?

For FIVE YEARS IN SUCCESSION we have won at New York or Boston THREE OF THE FIRST PRIZES; one year winning ALL THE FIVE FIRSTS AT NEW YORK; another year ALL FIRSTS AT BOSTON, save on pen; each year winning MORE FIRSTS THAN ALL COMPETITORS COMBINED . . . . . .

We have birds for sale that descend straight from these first prize winners. Past years matings were headed by such males as follows: 1-3-5 COCKS, 2 and 3 OPEN CLASS, and 1 and 2 PEN COCKERELS, BOSTON, 1903, also the sires of the four mentioned cockerels, Talk about male producing strains, WHERE IS ITS EQUAL? We don't charge any more for OUR KIND than those claimed to be (?) just as good. Write us for anything you want.

We shall sell eggs at $3.00 per thirteen straight, We are now preparing a circular giving our method of mating which has proven so successful. It is free to those who send for it. Egg orders booked now for future delivery, insuring shipment when wanted. (Send for Catalogue.)
